OWP's New Annual

Almanac offers yearly honors, year in review and directory

Oregon Wine Press is proud to present the 2013 Oregon Wine Almanac. It's our newest publication set to be an annual occurrence and one to keep year-round.

I believe this is the first time a wine pub has attempted to list all bonded and licensed wineries in Oregon, including pertinent neighboring wineries to the north in Washington.

Hilary Berg

In the directory portion, starting on page 30, OWP has also included restaurants that support Oregon wine — most honored with a 2013 Superior Cellar Award — as well as industry listings, lodging listings, wine retail listings and a calendar of Oregon's most treasured wine festivals and events.

In addition to the directory, you will find what used to be printed in OWP's January issue: top production numbers, a harvest review, most important stories of 2012 and the OWP Wine Person of the Year. For 2012, we were unanimous in choosing the dynamic duo of Ken and Karen Wright. A long overdue recipient, this couple is truly impressive.

Their successful winery with its impassioned following around the world is enough to grant them oodles of accolades. The Wrights' support of and involvement in their community — in both Carlton and the wine industry — merits serious recognition. Their charity, vision, dedication and drive also deserve a standing ovation, but it's always such a thrill to award those who are also genuinely nice.

After sitting down to lunch with them recently, I became captivated with the Wrights. To be honest, I was always a bit intimidated; but after breaking bread with them, I realized how down-to-earth, approachable and truly passionate they are — not to mention lots of fun, too.

After revealing their award status to co-workers, people nodded in agreement and some offered heart-warming stories of their interactions with Ken and Karen.

One such story involved my friend, Nathalie, and her son. They were playing at Wennerberg Park in Carlton when a bee stung Sam. Ken, who happened to be in the park at that moment, rushed over to help. He offered to run to a nearby restaurant to grab an onion, a homeopathic remedy for stings. When he returned with the onion and showed her how to apply the natural salve, she was humbled by his genuine generosity. The onion worked its magic, and so did Ken...

OWP is honored to give the 2012 Wine Persons of the Year Award to Ken and Karen Wright. We thank them for ALL they do in and out of the wine industry.

All in Flavor, Say Yum

Oregon's 2012 wines appear to be a treat for the tastebuds

BY KARL KLOOSTER

With harvest and crush complete, it's inevitable that talk has begun in earnest about the merits and demerits of the 2012 vintage.

While many of the wines are still in the process of completing ML — or secondary fermentation during which malic acid undergoes conversion to lactic acid, softening the overall taste impression — some are saying this is a year that will ultimately prove to be right up there with the best ever. Others prefer to take a wait-and-see approach, cautioning that early enthusiasm is often over-optimistic.

But the evolving scenario would indicate that a discussion of whether or not this may or may not be one of Oregon's greatest vintages is almost irrelevant. Why? It's all about the way the wines taste. Winemakers around the state are nothing short of ecstatic about flavor profiles, particularly in Pinot Noir. And that alone may be all this vintage needs to be called great.

Since the vast majority of Oregon wineries hang their hats on Pinot, as goes the noble Burgundian grape, so goes the wider impression of the industry.

Although a Pinot-centric approach ignores the different varietal emphasis embraced by some wineries, the dominance of the grape is inescapable.

If decison-makers beyond our own borders perceive that 2012 is a great Pinot year in Oregon, that perception will be beneficial for the industry statewide. The adage "A high tide lifts all boats" applies.

And the excitement expressed about the quality and character of the vintage, with particular enthusiasm in regard to flavors, would make anyone a believer. Here is just a sampling of quotes from a cross-section of well-known winemakers:

"Everything came in beautifully. The flavor profiles are rich and silky. I would compare it to 2008" —Don Crank, Willamette Valley Vineyards, Turner.

"A later harvest and also a great harvest. Light cluster weights limited the quantity. But I attribute the high, and I do mean high, quality fruit to this lack of size. Good skin-to-juice ratio, fantastic color, flavor and a balance only achieved in the best of vintages." —Steve Anderson, Eola Hills Wine Cellars, Rickreall.

"Phenomenal quality. Flavor profiles are amazing. This was a welcome reprieve from the last few years. But that challenge was valuable for all of Oregon; it added to our knowledge of how to make good wines under a variety of difficult conditions." —Joe Dobbes Jr., Dobbes Family Estate, Dundee.

"This was a seamless vintage. Potentially one of the best. The flavors are concentrated, silky and already approachable. Maybe as good as 2008." —Laurent Montalieu, NW Wine Company, Dundee.

"Everything came in quickly. Quantity was down a bit. Really nice flavors. Ripe and juicy. The wines just taste terrific. And site-specific character is definitely showing through." —Dave Paige, Adelsheim Vineyard, Newberg.

"We get fruit from all the Oregon appellations. Cluster weights were 60 percent of normal. The grapes were very concentrated. Everybody is really excited about overall quality. The wines are nicely balanced with ripe, pretty flavors." —Ken Johnston, 12th & Maple, Dundee.

"I got here in 2001 and have never seen a vintage as spectacular as this. We picked on both sides of the rain. The earlier harvest for our sparkling wines resulted in both good flavors and balanced acidity. The fruit came in perfectly. We didn't have to do much; just let Mother Nature do her thing." —Andrew Davis, Argyle Winery, Dundee.

"We're really excited about the fruit from our sources from around the state. There are some quantity losses, particularly for Pinot Gris, but the quality is outstanding." —Ryan Harms, Union Wine Co.

So how does the obvious advantage of such seductively appealing, upfront flavors translate in the marketplace?

The overriding reality is that at least 90 percent of wines at all levels of quality are purchased and consumed shortly after release. Only a tiny quantity ever reflects the benefits of cellaring.

Celebrate Oregon

Oregon Wine Bottles Up

Same players, more cases

BY KARL KLOOSTER

As you'll see in my harvest wrap-up on page 8, the 2012 yield has received universal acclaim as a vintage featuring heavenly flavors that promise praise for years to come. All the better for Oregon's 20 largest wineries, which represent more than 80 percent of the state's annual production.

At 231,500 cases, King Estate Winery retains its top spot this year in both total production at a single facility and for a brand or group of brands owned by a single winery. The winery's 2012 total was down approximately 7 percent from 2011, mirroring overall industry averages. A shortfall in Pinot Gris accounted for the reduction.

Conversely, the next three largest wineries — 12th & Maple, NW Wine Company and Duck Pond — showed slight gains in total production. Entirely a custom-crush facility, 12th & Maple solidly maintains the number two slot at 156,000 cases; unlike others who provide the service, it has no brands of its own.

Of the top 20, Union Wine Company had the greatest gain, growing 82.5 percent, from 40,000 cases in 2011 to 73,000 in 2012. That performance moved the winery from 16th to 8th place. Next was Argyle with a 31.2 percent production increase, from 46,800 to 61,400 cases, and A to Z Wineworks/REX HILL, which went from 101,200 to 119,300 cases, a jump of 11.8 percent.

In this effort to compile an accurate and informative industry profile, it is regrettable that basic information about one of Oregon's iconic names is unavailable. Under its new ownership by Washington-based Ste. Michelle Estates, Erath Winery's production figures will no longer be disclosed. Based on a previous estimate of some 125,000 cases annually, there is every reason to believe that its continued national marketing efforts would result in Erath retaining, if not increasing, production levels, which

Oregon Wine "Arrives"

Wine Spectator's praise of Oregon Pinot Noir excites industry

BY KARL KLOOSTER

Call it validation, verification, substantiation or confirmation. The vast majority of experts are now in agreement about the truth, reality and accuracy of a longstanding Oregon claim.

Since the beginning, when David Lett first planted Pinot Noir vines in the Dundee Hills, local winegrowers were convinced they had the potential to produce a superlative wine from the grape. Although early encounters with superb French competition proved Oregon Pinot could hold its own, even out-class the finest Burgundian Pinots, naysayers persisted.

By the late 1990s, cumulative evidence that Northwestern Oregon in general and the Yamhill Valley in particular were consistently producing world-class Pinot Noir could no longer be ignored. But the best?

Now, a decade and a half later, after countless competitions and a mountain of awards, one of the world's most highly regarded and widely read wine writers has declared Oregon the best in the country, and, by extension, the equal of Burgundy's best.

Wine Spectator Editor-at-Large Harvey Steiman covers Oregon, Washington and Australia. His career, spanning more than 40 years, includes a stint as wine columnist for the San Francisco Examiner through the 1970s. In that role, he covered the California industry as it began its climb to world prominence. He then joined the Wine Spectator's team of tasters, raters and commentators in 1983.

> "What makes the wines so good? Start with the vines, which seem to like Oregon's combination of soils and climate. Growers and winemakers have climbed a steep learning curve, largely while sharing their expertise with one another."
> HARVEY STEIMAN

Describing a recent visit to Oregon, where he met with several of the state's most prominent winemakers, Steiman used the opportunity to explicitly express his views. "The most recent Wine Spectator tasting report on Oregon reviewed approximately 380 Pinots, and more than half of them, from nearly 100 wineries, earned 90 points or higher on our 100-point scale.

"What makes the wines so good? Start with the vines, which seem to like Oregon's combination of soils and climate. Growers and winemakers have climbed a steep learning curve, largely while sharing their expertise with one another. They learned how to coax the character and personality from grapes capable of greatness. Most importantly, the wines taste distinct from one another, especially in the northern Willamette Valley.

"That's what Pinot Noir can do in Oregon, which today can rightfully claim to be America's home for the grape. For wine drinkers, who value the subtlety and expressiveness of Pinot Noir, the results are there to enjoy."

The magazine's annual Top 100 Wines of the World bestows a mark of excellence on every wine selected. Obviously, the higher on the list, the more prestigious the pronouncement. The 2012 list includes four Oregon wines. And this is

AMERICAN WINE SOCIETY CONFERENCE

The American Wine Society (AWS), the nation's largest wine consumers' organization, selected Portland as the site of its 2012 annual conference, the 45th conference AWS has held.

Portland's central location to the Pacific Northwest wine industry and internationally recognized culture of nightlife, food and drink appealed to the group. AWS Executive Director John Hames said, "It's centrally located near fantastic wine regions in both Oregon and Washington with amazing scenery, abundant locally grown foods and a wide variety of wonderful wines — what more could a wine lover want?"

The conference was held Nov. 8–10 and began with an opening reception of Oregon wines followed by two days of tasting sessions with leading personalities and wines from top regions throughout the wine world. Days were punctuated by wine-pairing meals, including a sparkling wine breakfast and grand banquet. Pre-conference activities included wine dinners and wine country excursions.

The AWS Commercial Wine Competition and the Amateur Wine Competition were organized in conjunction with the conference. AWS's wine judge certification training, the only in the world, was also held at the event.

The 2013 dates and location have yet to be determined.

FEAST PORTLAND

In celebration of Portland's culinary success, a festival was launched in 2012. Bon Appétit Presents Feast Portland, Sept. 20–23, showcased the vibrancy of the Oregon food community by featuring local culinary talent — from chefs and winemakers to farmers and distillers — and region-defining ingredients alongside internationally recognized industry professionals and experts.

Co-founded by Mike Thelin and Carrie Welch, the festival offered ample opportunity to both indulge and learn while interacting with local, national and even international industry elite — from large-scale tasting events like the Oregon Bounty Marketplace and Sandwich Invitational to intimate sit-down dinners, hands-on classes, live culinary demonstrations, thought-provoking speakers and industry get-togethers.

"With Portland and Oregon receiving worldwide culinary recognition and cementing their rightful places on the food map, a celebration embracing the region's rich history and incredible bounty seemed not only in order, but long overdue," said festival co-founders Thelin and Welch.

Feast Portland's 2013 event is set for Sept. 20–23.

WINE BLOGGERS' CONFERENCE

The Wine Bloggers Conference hosted its 2012 evnt in Portland, Aug. 17–19, 2012. It was the fifth such meeting and Oregon's first time to host.

"This is tremendous recognition of the stellar reputation of Oregon's wine industry...," said Steve Burns, then-Oregon Wine Board interim executive director. "Bloggers are having a growing influence on consumers' wine-buying decisions and to have their attention focused on Oregon during this conference will give our whole industry a tremendous boost."

Allan Wright, owner of Red Lodge, Montana-based Zephyr Adventures, which organizes the annual event, called the choice of Oregon not only a logical next step, but also one the members of the conference greeted with open arms.

"Oregon is an ideal place for the conference," Wright said. "Our wine bloggers actually selected Oregon as their preferred location for the 2012 conference in a poll over several other potential locations."

The conference attracts more than 330 bloggers and wine industry members annually for three days of education, networking and an intense focus on the host region's wine industry.

The 2013 Wine Bloggers Conference will be hosted in Penticton, British Columbia, marking the first time the conference will be held outside of the U.S.

SOWI Centers Itself

UCC wine facility celebrates grand opening

BY OREGON WINE PRESS STAFF

In February 2012, the doors opened at The Danny Lang Teaching, Learning & Event Center at Umpqua Community College in Roseburg. This jewel in UCC's crown now houses the college's Southern Oregon Wine Institute, where students enrolled in UCC's viticulture and enology program can earn a two-year associate's degree. SOWI, which was established in 2008, now also serves as an "incubator" for those who have completed the degree and want to try their hand at more winemaking without the capital expense.

Within the state-of-the-art facility, staff and students have access to winemaking equipment for instruction and production. The 24,000-square-foot building also contains a premiere meeting space available to the public, a culinary arts kitchen that can provide everything from a five-course meal to coffee and cookies, and a tasting room where students will learn how wines appeal to the public. ETS Laboratories, the leading independent laboratory serving the global wine industry today, is also on site to provide testing services for students and established Southern Oregon winemakers.

The building is named for Douglas County attorney Danny Lang who made the first and leading gift, $800,000, which enabled the project to begin and encouraged others to give. The UCC Foundation raised $2.5 million from about 250 individuals, foundations and other organizations to construct the building. Contributors — from timber barons to bankers, real estate investors to individual donors — believe education and wine prosperity will boost the entire region's economy.

"From the excellent design work of Fletcher, Farr and Ayotte and Laurence Ferar and Associates, to the construction management of R.E. Noah, this building showcases some of the best principles of winery design in the Pacific Northwest."

The center has many in the wine industry excited for the future of Southern Oregon wine, including Michael Donovan, RoxyAnn Winery's director of national sales and marketing, and president of Oregon Winegrowers Association.

"Both established and new wineries and vineyards stand to greatly benefit from the center," Donovan said. "It not only will offer a much needed resource for prospective employees of the wine industry to gain a quality education in the field of enology and viticulture, but it also will provide critical analytical laboratory services to the many winemakers in Southern Oregon.

"The beautifully designed event center will also allow for the region's wine industry to be showcased at the many conferences, receptions and other gatherings planned to stimulate economic growth in Southern Oregon."

MAY!

It's Oregon Wine Month

BY OREGON WINE PRESS STAFF

On Jan. 18, Gov. John Kitzhaber declared May "Oregon Wine Month." Kicking off the 31 days of Oregon wine, the Oregon Wine Board hosted the state's largest statewide consumer wine tasting to date: Unwine'd: Celebrate Oregon Wine.

Hosted at the Left Bank Annex on April 29, the event attracted more than 700 ticket holders to sample 350 wines — 21 varietals — from 87 wineries located in 14 AVAs. The only appellations not represented were Snake River — no Oregon wineries exist in this mostly-Idahoan AVA — and Red Hills Douglas Co., the state's smallest wine region. Alongside the wines, attendees sampled gourmet food from 13 restaurants.

"Oregon's wine industry has come a long way since we last celebrated Oregon Wine Month and attempted a statewide tasting like Unwine'd," said Michael Donovan, OWB chairman. "While showcasing our state's diversity, the event allowed consumers to meet and talk to Oregon's artisan winemakers. This was an opportunity for Northwest wine consumers to sample the incredible quality of Oregon wine from every region under one roof."

During Oregon Wine Month, wine retailers and restaurants throughout the state celebrated and promoted the Oregon wine industry, which contributed more than $2.7 billion to the state's economy in 2010. The month culminated with the annual winery open houses on Memorial Day Weekend, when most wineries are open for tastings.

Troon Turns 40

Applegate winery honors founder, four decades

BY OREGON WINE PRESS STAFF

In 1972, Richard "Dick" Troon purchased 32 acres in the western part of the Applegate Valley. He understood the warm days and cool nights, along with superior soil conditions, were perfect for grapegrowing. He planted the varietals he liked to drink — Zinfandel, Cabernet Sauvignon and Chardonnay. This is where the story of Troon Vineyard opens.

After more than 20 years of tending vines, Troon began his winemaking adventure. Although a sign hangs in the vineyard, reading "Purveyors of Fine Wines Since 1976," Troon didn't create a winery until 1993.

In 2000, one of Troon's most successful efforts was invented by mistake. He harvested Syrah deficient in nitrogen, leading to a stuck fermentation. The resulting wine was soft and fruit-forward with a hint of residual sugar. He named it Druid's Fluid Red after his pride in his Scottish heritage. Initially selling it to friends and family, the wine has become one of the most popular reds produced in Southern Oregon.

Three years later, Troon sold his vineyard to the father-and-son team of Larry and Chris Martin. Shortly after, second-generation California winemaker Herb Quady joined the team.

By 2005, the Martins constructed a new winery and tasting room, and set out to expand the estate to 98 acres, with 40 planted to winegrapes. With awards like "Best Zinfandel in the World" given to the winery's 2002 Reserve Zinfandel from Jerry B. Mead's New World International Wine Competition, Troon Vineyard was receiving the recognition the new owners were seeking.

The following year, the winery planted Vermentino, the first in Oregon and Pacific Northwest. Originally from Sardinia and Corsica, the grape produces a refreshing, crisp wine, an ideal pairing for seafood. It has become Troon's signature white wine and another success story.

By 2011, the estate vineyard reached its goal of 40 acres and received LIVE (Low Input Viticulture & Enology) certification. Fast-forward to today, and Troon is celebrating 40 years with two tasting rooms — one at the winery and the other in Carlton — and an annual production of about 10,000 cases.

Although founder Dick Troon passed away in October 2011, Chris Martin and staff were honored to celebrate his pioneering tradition at their anniversary event on Aug. 4, 2012.

Ag survey omits valuable industry information

BY KARL KLOOSTER

In November 2011, the U.S. Department of Agriculture advised the Oregon wine industry that, because of budget constraints, its National Agricultural Statistics Service arm would be unable to produce the annual Oregon Vineyard and Winery Report for 2011.

That announcement was an unpleasant surprise to virtually everyone involved in the making, marketing, promoting or selling of wine — or even goods and services related to wine. So the Oregon Wine Board stepped in to fund an abbreviated version.

The USDA began conducting an annual vineyard survey, and compiling a thorough report based on it, in 1981. It expanded to cover wineries in 2001, because of the industry's growing importance.

The key has always been accuracy and authenticity. The report is based on information gathered directly from vineyard and winery personnel who fill out detailed questionnaires regarding their activities and results. This proprietary information has been voluntarily submitted, with the assurance it would be compiled only in aggregate form by the federal agency, but not otherwise released or shared. Near-universal cooperation has made the NASS report the single most valuable informational tool available. It has provided a comprehensive, county-by-county picture of Oregon vineyard and winery development over the past decade. The ability to trace patterns is prominent among its numerous benefits. It is immensely useful in forecasting trends and guiding future plans.

For 2011, however, the report — released April 16, 2012 — was reduced from its normal 12 pages to a scant two. All information on wineries has been omitted, along with a lot of data on vineyards. What remains are core figures on vineyard acreage, vineyard yield and crop pricing.

With this basic information, one can at least determine that production increased a revitalizing 33 percent over the brief 2010 vintage. In fact, 2011 production totaled a record 41,500 tons, exceeding the previous high of 40,200 tons set in 2009.

Beyond that, however, there is little to be gleaned. Gone are production figures for each of 16 varieties of grape and 15 counties or groupings of counties. They have been replaced with a single chart tracking seven major varieties in five major geographic areas.

The four main causes of grape losses have been tracked, along with acreage changes by variety and price per ton by variety and geographic grouping. And that's useful. Unfortunately, dangling such tantalizing tidbits merely emphasizes how much has been lost, as these elements were fully developed in previous reports — and they were accompanied by additional pricing and sales information.

The biggest loss was the rich array of winery stats. Previous reports included the number, crush and cooperage of wineries in each county, as well as the crush by variety and area, which encompassed 10 individual varieties and a catch-all category for the rest.

Even more informative were the detailed charts examining

No CARE

Schrader repeals HR 1161

BY OWP STAFF

On Jan. 17, 2012, Rep. Kurt Schrader withdrew his support of HR 1161, also known as the Community Alcohol Regulatory Effectiveness (CARE) Act.

Last September, Congressman Schrader became a co-sponsor of HR 1161, which limits direct shipping for wineries and gives wholesalers monopoly power to pass discriminatory state laws removing consumers' ability to buy wine directly from their favorite winery or wine merchant.

"I appreciate the thoughtful discussion I have had with Oregon winegrowers and enthusiasts over the past several months," Rep. Schrader said. "In response to the concerns raised by our wine community, I no longer believe the CARE Act is an appropriate vehicle for regulation of alcohol. I have officially withdrawn my support for HR 1161 and look forward to building on the relationship we have developed to further grow the success of Oregon's wine industry."

The Oregon Winegrowers Association strongly opposes this bill. OWA President Michael Donovan was pleased with the congressman's decision.

"The Oregon Winegrowers Association is extremely pleased that Rep. Schrader has agreed to withdraw his sponsorship of HR 1161," Donovan said. "The OWA worked hard to educate Rep. Schrader about why this legislation would be detrimental for Oregon wine and the growth of our industry."

WINE PERSONS of the YEAR

KEN AND KAREN WRIGHT

By Karl Klooster

It's noon at Ken Wright Cellars in Carlton, and the fragrant aroma of simmering pasta sauce wafts from the kitchen, up the staircase and into the office area. On the main floor, just inside the winery's massive double-door main entrance, Karen Wright ladles servings of perfectly cooked rigatoni onto individual plates. Upstairs, staff members transform the conference table for lunch with plates, flatware and glasses. This is a daily ritual in which Karen prepares a small feast for office and winery workers. If guests appear, all the better.

Ken Wright is busy in a far corner of the winery thieving young wine from a barrel for an out-of-state distributor with a late morning appointment. After wrapping up his meeting, he joins the group.

The Wrights obviously don't regard their daily employee lunches as anything special, but it's a thoughtful touch that typifies the way this couple view both their own and the larger world. With that in mind, it may come as no surprise to know that after lunch, rather than descending into the winery to tweak some fermented grape juice that made Ken Wright wines famous, the winemaker cum community leader is off to City Hall.

On the agenda is an afternoon-long strategy session with Carlton's city manager, Chad Olsen. "We're going over plans for development of the Yamhelas Westsider Trail," Ken says with no small degree of enthusiasm. The trail, or rather the future potential behind its creation, has been a pet project of Wright's ever since he discovered more than a decade ago that the Union Pacific Railroad was proposing to sell an old right-of-way.

The 17-mile stretch, over which a rail line once ran between Gaston and St. Joseph, would be an ideal connection for light rail. But its initial purchase price of $9 million was completely out of reach. The Wrights commissioned a new appraisal of the route and used the result as leverage to encourage the Union Pacific Railroad to drop its original asking price to the appraised value of $2.4 million. Once the asking price went down, they applied for a state Transportation Enhancement Grant to cover 90 percent of the purchase and secured agreement from the Yamhill County Commissioners to pay the remaining $246,000.

Now firmly on track, Ken has organized efforts with the creation of Yamhelas Westsider Trail Coalition. He and other key proponents continue to promote the possibilities and pursue support from residents and Yamhill and Washington county officials. They've also applied for federal grants. Their goal is the creation of a multi-use recreational trail along the old rail line connecting McMinnville, Carlton, Yamhill and Gaston to the area around Hagg Lake. Once completed, the trail would be an attractive asset in its own right in addition to retaining public ownership of the right-of-way until a mass transit option becomes feasible.

This is yet another example of how, ever since they started Ken Wright Cellars in 1994, the Wrights have embraced the community of Carlton as if its citizens were extended family.

Their first winery was located in the former Portland Glove Factory on Main Street. Before they were able to move into the building, however, Karen had to negotiate a zoning variance with the city. "Carlton wanted only commercial businesses on Main Street," Karen said. "I told them that we were manufacturers only one month a year and the other 11 we were operating a showroom and warehouse."

"We got the approval just in time, too," Ken added. "It was August and there was barely time to set up so we could process that year's harvest. As you may recall, 1994 was a very good year for Pinot Noir."

By the time he set up shop in Carlton, Ken already had eight vintages in the local wine industry. Previously, he had been working in the California wine market. But his old college roommate from Kentucky, Allen Holstein, by then vineyard manager of Argyle Winery, enticed him north. (If you ever run into Ken at the winery, or anywhere else for that matter, ask him what he and Allen did during the 1973 Kentucky Derby.)

As the founder/winemaker of Panther Creek Cellars in McMinnville, he established a solid reputation for exceptional Pinot Noir. So much so that he had begun selling wine on futures. "A customer was tasting new Pinot with me in 1987 and asked if he could buy a case," Wright said. "I told him, sure, I'd put his name on the list. But he said he wanted to pay for it now and make sure it was his."

A first in Oregon, pre-ordering wine meant people purchased wine they would not receive for another year. The price was lower than it would be at release, giving Ken needed operating capital. He continues to offer futures to this day and that method of advance sales still represents a majority of their retail wines.

In 1999, the Wrights purchased a nearby piece of property and built their own winery from the ground up. Karen, who had operated her own design firm in McMinnville, can be credited with its creation. "There was nothing but a half collapsed barn there," she said. "I purposely gave the structure a rustic wood, board and batten exterior, so it would look like it had always been there."

From that time forward, Ken Wright Cellars became the venue for many a local event. A Taste of Carlton, now Flavors of Carlton, the primary fundraiser for Carlton Together Cares, has been held there every year since its inception in 2003. The event has given a big boost to the local nonprofit organization. Founded in 1998, CTC has created youth programs ranging from after-school care to sports, recreation and community projects.

The winery also hosted Uncorked, the McMinnville Rotary's annual wine and art auction, for three years, from 2007 through 2009. It is the Yamhill Valley's most successful local fundraising event.

The Wrights helped start Carlton's Walk in the Park, the town's now-signature summer event, and Ken has served as its board president ever since. The 10th anniversary edition of this annual community benefit was held in August 2012.

Stunning original art and design pieces are a part of Flavors and Walk in the Park. Both events feature gorgeous, handmade jewelry created by Karen Wright, whose talents are obviously multifaceted.

On the wine industry side, Ken was in on the beginning of the International Pinot Noir Celebration, where he served as a board member during its developmental years. IPNC has since grown to become the Oregon wine industry's premier annual event, recognized as one of the world's most exceptional wine experiences at any level.

Adding to his wine industry résumé, Ken was a founder of !Salud¡, the health program for vineyard workers, which is lauded throughout the wine world for its assistance to this underappreciated group.

Now guests can enjoy both. BELOW: A map of the proposed Yamhelas Westsider Trail shows a railroad-turned-trail system that runs from Hagg Lake to Highway 99W outside Lafayette. Karen has plenty to be proud of in her own right. Once an avid soccer player, she has taken a youth sports leadership role as founder of the Yamhill-Carlton Soccer Club. In the three years since it was started, the club has grown to 12 teams representing K-6 boys and girls. "We had 52 kids enrolled in the program last year," she said, "and we expect even more this spring."

The larger anticipated turnout is due primarily to a major attraction in the person of Portland Timbers Youth Academy Director Mike Smith, who Karen has arranged to work with the club next year. "He told me he'll be drilling the kids in important basic skills," she said. "But more than that, he plans to bring Timbers' playbooks so they can see how the pros do it. That will be a big thrill for them."

In the three years since it was started, the club has grown to 12 teams.

Karen has also sponsored Santa at The Depot for years. The annual canned food drive is held in the vintage train station the couple bought in 2003, which now serves at the Ken Wright Cellars tasting room.

The beautifully restored building originally served as home to Tyrus Evan wines, the Wrights second label named for Ken's sons. Featured varietals are Cabernet Sauvignon and Syrah. The Depot was part of a package deal when the couple acquired several properties from Bob and Sharon Nistler, former owners of the old Madsen Grain Co. complex. "It was our first major restoration in Carlton," Ken said. "The Nistlers came to us saying they were retiring and wanted to sell us their buildings because they knew we would preserve them. And we took that promise seriously."

They have subsequently partnered with Kris and Susan Stubberfield to purchase additional properties in Carlton to be upgraded over time. When the Wrights agreed to sell a couple of the properties in the heart of the old grain complex to investor Cameron Healy, the same conditions applied. "Cameron is a great guy who shares our vision," Karen said. "He is one of those behind the scenes people who is wonderful asset here. Not very many people know he was the founder of Kettle Chips." A handsome brick building on Highway 47 at the approach to downtown, now home to Scott Paul Wines is the showcase example of that commitment.

"The wine industry and restaurants predominate on Main Street," Ken said. "And we'd like to diversify that. But downtown is full and thriving, which isn't bad."

Among their other local involvements are Ken's service on the Carlton Fire Board and the trees lining Main Street, which the Wrights bought and maintain. They also purchased a small piece of corner property on Main Street, turned it into a pocket park and had a mural painted on an adjacent wall. Ken pulls out a copy of "Recollections of Carlton," a book about the town's history. He points to the seemingly aerial view of the town a century ago that wraps around its cover from front to back.

"This photo was taken from the top of the grain elevator," he said. "We used it as the model for the mural. It sort of goes with the logo mural we had done on the grain elevator wall after we bought it.

"It's amazing how much difference one or two people can make in a small town," Ken observed. In fact, he continued. "That was one of the big pluses for us in deciding to move to Carlton. For example, I got to write the city's signage and design review ordinances. You'll never see any franchise neons here."

The couple's latest project has them bubbling with excitement. The Wrights, along with the Yamhill-Carlton AVA Winegrowers, recently implemented Oregon's first college-credit viticulture course in the state at Yamhill-Carlton High School. Students can enroll in classes and earn college credits through a partnership with Salem's Chemeketa Community College and the high school's already-dynamic FFA (formerly called Future Farmers of America) program. A one-acre "land lab" vineyard on school property will be planted in spring, a first for any high school in the nation. When asked what grapes they would plant, Ken responded, "Pinot Noir, of course."

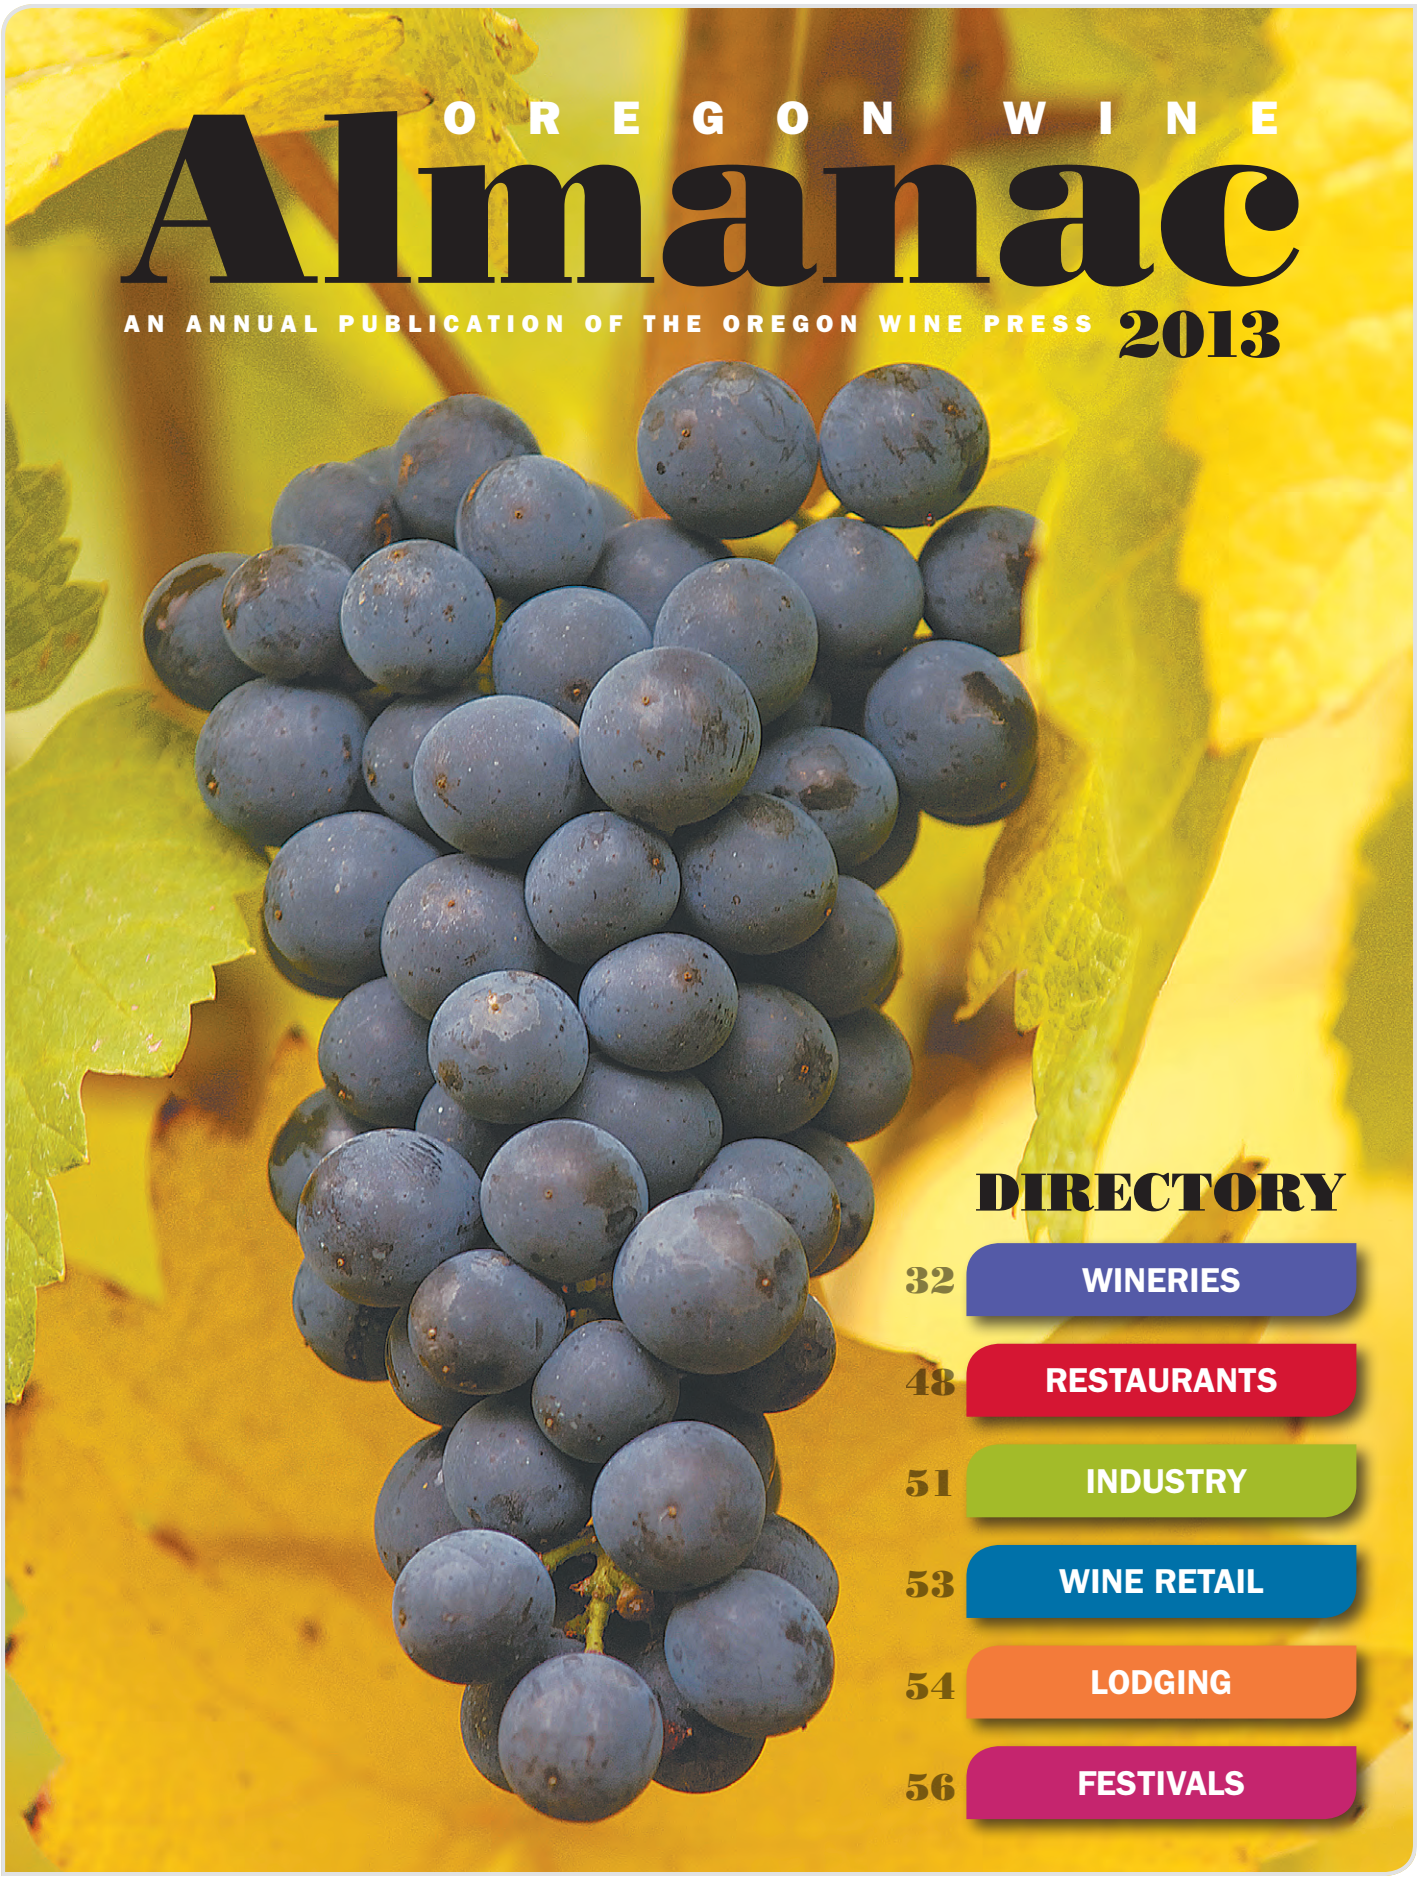

The Wrights have adopted two young Vietnamese girls. Josie, 11, and Evy, 6, are now sisters and just two regular American kids. As a result of their positive adoption experience, Ken and Karen have become strong supporters of HOLT International, a Eugene adoption agency, which finds "forever families" for children from a dozen countries.

Their daughters have much to look up to and a bright future, as does the community of Carlton, because of the Wrights and other like-minded residents. Their leadership, innovation and enthusiastic commitment to their neighbors is astounding.

Oregon Wine Press is honored to name Ken and Karen Wright the 2012 Wine Persons of the Year.

Superior Cellar Awards

Presented by Oregon Wine Press in conjunction with Oregon Wine Board

The Superior Cellar Awards provides consumer guidance on restaurants that feature diverse and broad selections of Oregon wines on their wine lists. The goal of the program is to help consumers find restaurants, both in Oregon and elsewhere, that strongly advocate Oregon wine and to encourage restaurants to carry and feature Oregon wines.

Wine lists are evaluated for breadth, depth and balance as well as specific selections. Emphasis is also placed on waitstaff training and education; special tastings and other wine-related events are also taken into consideration.

AG SURVEY

tonnage statistics by estate grown, purchased and custom crush. This was accompanied by another chart listing 16 varieties by origin — estate, other Oregon and out of state.

An example of just how difficult this information would be to compile without benefit of the NASS process is evident in the numbers of wineries in operation and their locations.

This basic information is available from the Oregon Liquor Control Commission. But the list requires extensive processing to have value from a quantitative standpoint.

Also gone are charts detailing inventory and sales by variety, both by the case and in bulk, over the previous two years. One of the bigger losses was a chart called, "Domestic sales by destination," which was divided into two categories.

The first, "Direct to consumers," included wineries or tasting rooms, wine clubs, events and online. The second, "Sales to distributors, retailers and restaurants," was broken down by Oregon, Washington, New York, California and Other U.S. Compiling such information through other means would be tedious and expensive.

That's also true for a chart titled, "Export sales by variety and wine type," which covered the case quantities of 11 types sold to Canada, Japan, South Korea, All Other Asia, the U.K., the Caribbean, Scandinavia and All Other.

To maintain continuity of information at the fundamental level, the Oregon Wine Board commissioned this year's abbreviated version.

Its recent release informs us about the dramatic increase in overall production levels, despite a difficult and prolonged vintage. It also reveals that Pinot Noir remains the unchallenged king, accounting for 23,726 tons, or 57 percent, of Oregon's total grape production.

Pinot Gris follows at 6,046 tons. Next is Chardonnay, 1,923 tons; Riesling, 1,866; and Syrah, 1,319. A contender to watch closely is Tempranillo, which increased from 242 tons in 2010 to 526 in 2011.

Putting all this in perspective, the NASS budget reductions have affected every aspect of agriculture, not simply the wine industry. That's a shame. If there's any area where a small amount of money has been effectively spent, it's this one.

The 2012 report is due to be released in April 2013. Check here for the report: http://www.nass.usda.gov/Statistics_by_State/Oregon/Publications/Vineyard_and_Winery/index.asp would put it in second position from a brand standpoint.

Therefore, King Estate retains its strong number one spot, with Erath earning a space-holder number two by default. Duck Pond maintains third position with 119,400 cases for 2012.

Marking another notable achievement in 2012, Sokol Blosser's Evolution brand has grown from 79,400 cases in 2011 to 94,300 in 2012. This figure impressed further when compared with the 2010 number of 65,000 cases, which means in just two years, Evolution has surged upward by an impressive 45 percent.

Looking at the overall harvest picture, the most important changes among Oregon's largest wineries and brands are noted above. The group of major players remains essentially the same.

It would appear at this point that 2012 will prove to be an exceptional quality year, perhaps rivaling 2008, but with lower quantity compared to all but 2010 among recent vintages.

Oregon Wine Press strives to make this report as accurate as possible. However, when production drops below the 25,000- to 30,000-case level, several wineries are tightly clustered and variables can affect their totals.

If any winery that would qualify for a place in the 2012 rankings has been overlooked, please contact us, and we will correct the error in a future issue.

HARVEST REVIEW

Therefore, any enhancements or detractions that additional time in the bottle might bring are not a consideration for the vast majority of wine drinkers. They drink them young and get what they get.

Evaluating mature wines is essentially an exercise undertaken and, I might add, regarded with eager anticipation and thoroughly enjoyed by industry experts and aficionados.

They are among the very few with access to aged bottles pulled out five, ten or more years later. Those few of well-tuned palates and a depth of experience are best able to properly appreciate such enological gems.

Meantime, given the experts' take on 2012, more average human beings who take pleasure in good fermented grape juice will likely appreciate the fact that they're getting an exceptional here-and-now taste treat.

WINE SPECTATOR

from a state with a minuscule 1/10th of 1 percent of the world's wine production.

Shea Vineyards 2009 Willamette Valley Estate Pinot Noir captured seventh place, the highest ranking ever achieved by an Oregon wine.

Dick Shea said, "I was particularly thrilled by the fact that an Oregon Pinot Noir broke into the top 10 for the first time. It's really gratifying to see that. It's also nice that our least expensive and largest production Pinot was selected."

Placing 14th was the Maysara Estate 2009 Cuvée McMinnville Pinot Noir, which is no small accomplishment, and the Momtazi family couldn't be more pleased.

Maysara truly is a family affair these days. Founders Moe and Flora Momtazi are joined by daughters Tahmiene, winemaking, Naseem, marketing, and Hanna, hospitality, in running the operation.

"The funny thing about it is that these grapes were committed to a buyer who canceled just before harvest," Moe said. "So we had no choice but to use them ourselves. My daughter, Tahmiene, was still pretty new in her position as winemaker. But she did such a great job, we decided to keep making the wine."

Argyle 2002 Extended Tirage Brut (96 points, $70) occupies 18th place. This is the second time Argyle Winery's longest-aged sparkling wine has climbed high on the magazine's annual rankings. In 2008, the 1998 Extended Tirage placed 17th.

Co-founder Rollin Soles said, "It's great to be recognized, and the larger story is that this is the first time a major wine periodical has scored a New World sparkling wine as highly as they do Champagne. Breaking the 'glass ceiling' for sparkling wine with a Willamette Valley-derived wine is especially great news for our region."

Fourth among the Oregon wines entering the top 100 was Evening Land 2010 Seven Springs Pinot Noir, Eola-Amity Hills (93 points, $45), claiming the 79th spot.

A relative newcomer here, the California-based company has added French expertise to its team with winemaker Dominique Lafon, whose family is famed for its Burgundian wines.

Altogether, this is the best Wine Spectator showing Oregon has ever had. And this recognition is all the more reason to go forward with the belief that even better is yet to come.
