Normal Is Boring Anyway

PANDEMIC HOLDS ON,
YET WE GET ALONG

BY HILARY BERG

While the past year was not exactly normal, 2021 made a valiant effort, exceeding 2020 yet shy of pre-pandemic calm.

Gathering with friends made a world of difference. With masks on, open spaces and vaccinated guest lists, get-togethers resumed on patios and decks across Oregon. Tasting rooms also perked up as vaccination rates increased and state mandates loosened.

Taking further precaution, many wineries changed from regular business hours to appointments in order to control occupancy. From what I've heard and from my own winery's experience, this adjustment has been a resounding success, attracting interested buyers, translating into more meaningful sales and deeper one-on-one experiences.

For some wineries, 2021 was the time to expand, creating satellite tasting rooms far from home base. Here in McMinnville, specifically Third Street, a number of brands outside the Willamette Valley opened shop, including Jacob Williams Winery from the Columbia Gorge and Troon Vineyard based in Southern Oregon's Applegate Valley. Both make bold statements with their big reds in the heart of Pinot country.

On the flipside, Willamette Valley wineries looked elsewhere, too, expanding business in popular destinations like Bend. In Oregon's high desert, Stoller Wine Group opened its wine bar, and Domaine Serene, its wine lounge, both spaces replete with warm wood, cozy spaces and world-class Pinot Noir.

These secondary sites allow wineries to take advantage of high foot traffic not possible at their estates tucked away in scenery-soaked, vine-lined locations, forever the main attraction of wine country.

Most festivals were still hesitant with staging in-person events, understandably knowing large gatherings can quickly become hot spots of COVID-19 infection. But thankfully, fundraisers remained strong even in the online arena. The 30th annual ¡Salud! The Oregon Pinot Noir Auction raised $850,000 via the virtual event benefitting vineyard worker healthcare. With smartphones attached to our wrists and hips, the success of online alternatives is no major surprise.

Although we're still wearing masks, keeping physical distance — mostly with strangers — and sharing vaccination selfies, life looks more familiar than a year ago. Here's to hoping a cure is found soon or vaccinations reach much higher numbers, snuffing it out the ol' polio way.

No matter what happens in 2022, we're all in this together. Cheers to embracing whatever the year brings. ■

TOUGH YEAR YET RESILIENT SALES

BY OWP STAFF

While the majority of Oregon winemakers made wine from grapes harvested in 2020, the year was challenging, to say the least. Some rare weather disruptions combined with naturally lower yields, wildfire smoke and COVID-19-related labor shortages and restrictions made for a roller-coaster year. The Oregon Wine Board's 2020 Oregon Vineyard & Winery Report reflects these difficulties, showing declines in the state's grape tonnage and wine production.

Since 1981, the University of Oregon's Institute for Policy Research and Engagement (IPRE) has compiled the annual report. The latest study shows the estimated farm gate value (market value of a product minus the selling costs) of wine grape production decreased 34%, or by nearly $80 million, to approximately $159 million.

Additionally, the 2020 report revealed the following downward movements:

- ① Due to cooler late spring weather reducing clusters, yield per acre decreased by 24%.
- ② Total grape production dropped 29% as yields and September wildfires resulted in 30,000 fewer tons harvested than the previous year.
- ③ Case sales remained roughly flat, growing less than a percentage point (0.7%) to 4.69 million across all channels.

Compare this data to 2019, when case sales were 4.66 million, making a leap of 1 million cases over a two-year period from 3.60 million in 2017.

④ Sales through direct-to-consumer (DTC) channels declined by 27% overall. Some tasting room losses were offset by wine club and other channels.

The report also revealed a handful of bright spots in a year disfigured by calamities. What was a brutal year on the production and supply side remained favorable for demand and sell-through (percentage of a product sold by a retailer after being shipped by its supplier). This is evident in Oregon's volume growth of more than 9% nationally in an extremely slow-growing national market, due, in part, to the highest level of national market penetration ever recorded for Oregon.

Positive notes included:

- ① Planted acreage increased 6%, or more than 2,100 acres, from 37,399 to 39,531. Plantings expanded in every region.
- ② Grape tonnage harvested rose in the Rogue Valley and Columbia River regions by 5% and 4%, respectively, accounting for 28% of grape tonnage in 2020.
- ③ Oregon wine sales to national distributors climbed 3.5%.
- ④ Global sales increased 24%, with notable growth in all markets. Canada continues to lead export markets, accounting for 46% of export sales.
- ⑤ Consumer takeaway during Oregon Wine Month improved 29% in Nielsen scanner-store data versus the comparable pre-COVID baseline in 2019, while the overall wine category grew just 9%.

⑥ Similarly, during that period, DTC shipments rose 31%, outpacing the wine category's growth of 24%.

WINES AND VINES

Some 995 wineries now call Oregon home, an increase of 10% compared with 2019. In addition, the number of vineyards increased from 1,297 in 2019 to 1,370 in 2020, representing growth of 6%. Leading the charge, the Columbia River region, which includes the Oregon side of the Columbia Gorge, Columbia Valley and Walla Walla Valley AVAs, as well as the Rocks District of Milton-Freewater, shows a 20% increase in wineries in 2020 over 2019. The Rogue Valley AVA, which includes the Applegate Valley AVA, now contains 122 wineries, an uptick of 12%.

VARIETIES

The leading variety in Oregon remains Pinot Noir, accounting for 59% of all planted acreage and 49% of wine grape production. The Willamette Valley in 2019 was responsible for 70% of the production of wine in the state, which dropped to 63% in 2020. Similarly, its harvest acreage slipped from 71% of the state's harvest in 2019, down to 67% in 2020.

Production sank for Pinot Noir statewide, except in the Rogue Valley and the Columbia River regions, which observed increases of 20% and 76%, respectively. Pinot Noir production in the Willamette Valley fell over 41%.

Some emerging varieties gained popularity across the state in 2020. Albaniño production rose almost 45% in the Willamette Valley, and acreage increased from 8 to 25 planted acres in the Rogue Valley. Tempranillo saw a slight uptick with 124 planted acres in the Umpqua Valley and a 13% hike in the Rogue.

EXPORTS

International Oregon wine exports grew to 143,541 in 2020, compared to 115,434 cases sold in 2019. All countries counted, including Canada, Mexico, United Kingdom, Europe, Hong Kong, and Japan, bumped up in case sales. Canada represented the largest increase of 23% at 65,459 cases of Oregon wine sold, reflecting the residual effects of pre-COVID promotions.

SALES

As noted above, sales of Oregon wine crept up less than a percentage point; however, dollar-wise, that number increased almost 4% from $673.9 million statewide to $699.6 million. A key to Oregon's continuing growth remains the fact its dollar sales are growing faster than its case volume. Longtime industry analyst Danny Brager says this helps explain why "Oregon is a growth stand-out," and continues to be a profitable segment for retailers.

Brager notes the average price per bottle of Oregon wine shipped directly to consumers continued its upward climb in 2020 at $41.88, second only to Napa Valley wines, averaging $59.92 per bottle.

As noted in previous research, the average bottle price of Oregon wines remains high in retail stores measured by Nielsen at $16.72 compared to $8.19 for the overall category.

OWB also tasked IPRE with a similar breakout report called Impacts to Oregon's Wine Industry: Covid-19 and the 2020 Wildfires. Important indicators show 62% of growers reported impacts from the 2020 wildfires, and the COVID-19 pandemic affected about 35% of vineyards and 45% of wineries, posing a series of challenges for businesses. ■

ABOVE: In 2015, Jim Maresh does tractor work at Maresh Vineyards, which he started planting more than four decades ago in the Worden Hill neighborhood of the Dundee Hills.

Jim Maresh

BY KERRY McDANIEL BOENISCH

Dundee Hills resident Jim Maresh, one of the Willamette Valley's first grape growers, died March 7, 2021. A devoted family man who loved to dance to jazz with his beloved wife, Loie, and drove a tractor into his 90s, Jim's passing left an empty spot in the hearts of his longtime friends, the self-proclaimed Geezers, aka the Geezers Grapegrowers Group.

About those Geezers...

In 1969, Dick Erath drove up Jim Maresh's Dundee Hills driveway in an old, beat-up BMW. He was a formidable-looking guy; Jim wasn't sure he was going to let him in. "I've looked all over the West Coast for a great viticulture site, and I think you're sitting on it," Dick told Jim.

"Well, I've tried everything else," said Jim, who at the time was farming cherries, prunes and walnuts. "Let's build a greenhouse on your property and propagate cuttings," suggested Dick.

And so they did — the only other Yamhill County vineyard at the time belonged to David and Diana Lett of The Eyrie Vineyards. The Maresh Red Barn Tasting Room (now Arterberry-Maresh) and Erath (originally Knudsen-Erath) operated on neighboring vineyard slopes for 45 years on Worden Hill Road.

The chance meeting marked the beginning of a lifelong friendship that endured into retirement, when the two met monthly with other retired growers for the Geezer meetings ... until the passing of Jim, when the group lost their patriarch.

Industry luminaries loomed large in my young life, and Jim Maresh's stories radiated throughout the decades and continued around the Geezers' lunch table.

Jim treasured his native state's University of Wisconsin Badgers almost as much as he enjoyed telling stories about the nascent Oregon wine industry — like planting the first vine on Worden Hill Road and then waking up one day to realize it had been stolen — but he would never schedule a meeting when his team was playing.

During Geezer meetings, Dick Erath would roll his eyes and chuckle, while Vivian Webber, the lone Geezerette, would interject an anecdote. My father, Jim McDaniel (McDaniel Vineyards/Torii Mor), Gerry Koschal (Saucy Vineyards/Crumbled Rock/Furioso), Gary Fuqua (Fuqua Vineyards/Archery Summit) and John Davidson (Walnut City WineWorks) provided ongoing commentary.

Vivian recalled many neighborhood milestones in the Maresh driveway, recounting how she and her husband, Arthur, had driven around for hours looking for David Lett's house and had been

Maria Stuart

BY MARIA PONZI

The Oregon wine industry lost a significant treasure with the recent death of Maria Stuart of R. Stuart & Company on Oct. 13, 2021. Often described as remarkable, exceptional and extraordinary, Maria passed suddenly after living with a rare form of cancer for 20 months. A true industry leader and mentor within the Oregon wine community, her wine career dates nearly 30 years.

Born Nov. 6, 1964, in East Lansing, Michigan, Maria Eileen Czamanske graduated from Valparaiso University in 1986 with a bachelor's in English and journalism. After a brief career in public relations and event planning, she started her wine career in Chicago as a sales representative. While there, she discovered the magic between food and wine and had the pleasure of befriending the wines of Oregon and their makers. During her first visit to the International Pinot Noir Celebration (IPNC) in 1990, she was smitten with Oregon, the Willamette Valley and local winemaker Rob Stuart. Shortly thereafter, Maria moved to Portland, and, in time, she and Rob married.

Eventually, they made their home in McMinnville, where Maria worked in various marketing and event positions in the industry, including coming full circle as executive director of the IPNC.

In 2001, the couple started their own winery, R. Stuart & Company, in what's now known as McMinnville's Granary District. It was her vision to create a winery that produced amazing wines for all occasions in an inclusive environment where growers, staff and customers are equally honored.

Always the entrepreneurs, the Stuarts opened one of the first wine bars in 2007 on historic Third Street in downtown McMinnville. Maria quickly gained a reputation as one of the Valley's most gracious hosts. With her effortless approach and appreciation for how wine and food bring people together, Maria crafted a bar menu of fresh, local products to serve alongside the hand-crafted wines. R. Stuart Wine Bar continues to be a favorite among locals and visitors alike, a place people gather to discover amazing wine and celebrate life.

Her passion for cooking good food is evident in “The Life and Times of a Pinot Mom,” her blog about food, life and the wine business. This down-to-earth, humorous, inside view has inspired others across the country to indulge in her recipes and her elegant yet comfortable entertaining style.

Maria was a leader in the development and welfare of the Oregon wine industry and local community at large. She served on the IPNC board of directors from 2012–2017, and was board president in 2016. Maria also served on the boards of Oregon Pinot Camp, McMinnville Downtown Association and was the vice chair of Visit McMinnville, an organization she was instrumental in creating. These groups, along with Maria’s tireless dedication, have brought national and international attention to McMinnville, the northern Willamette Valley and Oregon wine industry as a whole.

It’s not an exaggeration to say

Maria championed most local service organizations and causes in McMinnville. She proudly served on the board of the McMinnville Education Foundation and participated in countless committees and fundraisers that have made the community a better place for everyone. Whether it was sponsorship, wine donations, creative inspiration or sweat equity, Maria could always be counted on to lend a hand.

Beyond devotion to her professional life and community, Maria cherished her family: husband Rob, daughter Charlotte and sons Joe and Ben. Maria created a life of love and comfort for everyone she knew, nurturing friendships around the globe with her wit, charm and talents. She made all the hard work look easy, frequently sharing her gratitude while recognizing her own good fortune. As she described it, “Lucky for me, I get to cook for the people I love, throw parties and pour a little Pinot. Nothing makes me happier than gathering people around my table and serving them food that nourishes both body and soul.”

THREE WINERIES CELEBRATE HALF A CENTURY

Knudsen Vineyards

BY SOPHIA McDONALD

Knudsen Vineyards may not be a household name in the same way as other Oregon wine brands celebrating a golden anniversary this year, yet it has played a pivotal role in some of the region's best-known wine success stories.

From the top of her family's 228-acre property, Page Knudsen Cowles, the winery's managing partner, has a commanding view of the vines that provided fruit to pioneering still and sparkling wine producers. It is also a fitting setting to reflect on what has been a second home to her and her three brothers — Colin, David and Cal Jr. — for most of their lives. Both the new tasting room and growing wine label are part of a sweet homecoming, of sorts, for them, and a way for their family's legacy to shine even brighter.

Knudsen Vineyards was established by C. Calvert "Cal" and Julia Lee Knudsen in 1971. The couple became enamored with the wines of Champagne and Burgundy during their first trip to France in the 1960s. When they returned home to Portland, he realized how much the Willamette Valley reminded him of Burgundy.

The first whispers that Oregon could become a premium winegrowing region were already echoing around the Willamette Valley at the time. Knudsen happened upon a brochure published by a state agency mentioning the potential for growing grapes and referenced the work of people like David Lett and Dick Erath. He wrote them letters expressing his interest in starting a vineyard and eventually connected with Erath, an important figure in the Knudsen story.

In 1971, Knudsen found a former walnut orchard destroyed during the 1962 Columbus Day Storm. At 200 acres, it was far larger than what most vineyard owners were investing in at the time. "What my father brought to a very nascent industry at that point was a sense of scale," said Knudsen Cowles. "Most people were planting what they owned, which was 5, 10 or 15 acres." But her father had such faith in Oregon's potential that he was willing to go big.

His problem was he didn't have a practical way to plant it. Knudsen worked in the forest products industry, moving his family from Portland to Seattle for a job with Weyerhaeuser by the time he purchased the property. So he struck a deal with Erath.

"What they agreed upon was that Dick would come and live on our property, and Dad paid him to be the guy who was planting all the vines," Knudsen Cowles said. "He built a house from a kit and raised his family there." The opportunity allowed Erath to leave his day job and shift to full time in the wine industry.

By 1973, Erath had planted 40 acres on the property, making it the largest in the Willamette Valley at the time; one year later, Knudsen's plantings comprised nearly 55 acres, making the

David Adelsheim was in the Army during the Vietnam War; however, he was stationed 2000 miles away in Korea. There received his first serious introduction to the genteel subject of wine. “I had a captain who was from Puerto Rico who really knew wine,” he said. “We didn’t taste wine a lot, but from time to time, he would find a bottle, and he would talk about it in a much more serious way than I was used to hearing about wine.”

In 1969, David and his then-wife, Ginny Adelsheim, spent a summer camping out of the back of a car in Europe. The Old World did much to advance his knowledge of food, wine and their symbiotic relationship. When the couple returned to Portland, “Ginny finished up at college, and I took an uninteresting job at a bank and read every book I could find about wine,” he said.

His interest in wine remained just that until 1971, when he and Ginny were drawn in by the “back to the land” movement sweeping through America. The Adelsheims were among the wave of young people who purchased rural property in the hopes of becoming self-sufficient. “We started looking for land, and we heard that people were planting grapes. That was extremely exciting,” he said.

A chance encounter with Dick Erath and Bill Blosser earned the couple an invitation to a May Day picnic with David and Diana Lett of The Eyrie Vineyards. “By June 4, 1971, we were buying a piece of land with the intent of probably planting some grapes,” he said. They put their first vines in the ground the following year, but even then, the couple didn’t envision devoting themselves full-time to the wine industry.

Their dedication began to change as they became more involved in both their work and Oregon’s fledgling wine industry. David is quick to point out that all the “founding families” in the Willamette Valley’s wine scene played some role in creating the industry that is known worldwide today.

David wrote Oregon’s strict wine labeling regulations and lobbied for their passage with the Oregon Liquor Control Commission. He authored petitions for the Willamette Valley, Umpqua Valley and Chehalem Mountains AVAs. He was a leading voice in restructuring the Oregon Wine Board and Oregon Winegrowers Association, and played a role in organizing major events such as the International Pinot Noir Celebration and Oregon Pinot Camp.

David stayed at the helm of the company until 2017. That year, he and Ginny sold their stake to their long-time partners, Lynn and Jack Loacker, and the company hired a CEO. The change allowed David to take a step back from the day-to-day operations and focus on other projects.

Right now, he’s particularly excited to be working on the Chehalem Mountains AVA Neighborhood Project. “Since 2006, when the Chehalem Mountains AVA was approved, people growing grapes within the AVA have had a geographic area to point to when someone has asked, ‘Where are your grapes from?” David said. “But we have not been able to answer the next question: ‘What do your Pinot Noirs taste like?’ That’s because our AVA has so much variability: elevations, exposures, presumably vineyard meso-climates and, most obviously, soils.

“We’ve known our wines have different tastes and styles and that a lot of those differences have to do with where our grapes are Bill Blosser and Susan Sokol Blosser were also back-to-the-landers in the 1970s. Like many of Oregon's other wine industry pioneers, "we were young urban professionals without much agricultural or even business experience," said Susan. "So we were all driven by the thought of how wonderful it would be to live off the land.

"For us, the aesthetic of making something that added to the quality of life was compelling," she added. That's what led her and Bill to plant wine grapes on the 18 acres they acquired in December 1970 — the same month they had their first child. In the spring of '71, the family got digging.

Susan still brims with youthful enthusiasm when she talks about the events of 50 years ago. "We knew that this was an area that was totally untested, that we wanted to grow a grape that had never done well in the U.S., and that we didn't have a background in agriculture, but that just made it more of a challenge. We had a chance to develop something special — and by God, it worked. We were young enough — in our mid-20s — that we didn't have a lot to lose. It was a risk that really sounded like fun."

They quickly learned that "fun" was not the right word. "It was grueling," she said. "It was constant work and facing challenges that we had no experience dealing with. It was exciting, but it was also painful."

Despite all the obstacles, the couple didn't waiver from their commitment to their business, or their grapegrowing colleagues. Bill put to good use his background as an urban planner by helping map out areas best suited for grape growing in the Willamette Valley, then advocating that they be protected from development. He chaired regulatory bodies such as the Oregon Land Conservation and Development Commission, and was active in starting groups such as the Oregon Winegrowers Association and Yamhill County Wineries Association.

Susan has been widely recognized for her efforts to improving Oregon's natural and business environments. She was honored by the U.S. Soil and Water Conservation District for her work to prevent hillside erosion by using cover crops. She advocated to join the LIVE program for companies engaging in sustainable agricultural practices, helped the vineyards achieve organic certification and oversaw construction of the first LEED-certified winery building in the country.

Their whole lives revolved around the winery, and that meant their children's did too. "Our idea of doing something as a family would be going to a wine festival," Susan said. Three generations would pile into the car and travel to events like the Newport Food and Wine Festival. There, the couple was joined by Bill's father, pouring wine for guests, while his mother would entertain the children.

"Neither Bill or I ever talked to our kids about coming into

WV in the EU

WILLAMETTE VALLEY GRANTED PGI

BY OWP STAFF

In mid-July, the Willamette Valley received formal recognition and protection by the European Union (EU) through Protected Geographical Indication (PGI) status approval. This step represents a major breakthrough in global brand awareness and a milestone for the Valley's many hardworking winegrowers and winemakers.

The PGI system protects iconic names of agricultural products, spirit drinks and wines with a link to their geographical origin, including well-known products such as Champagne and Barolo. Only two American wine regions, Napa Valley and now the Willamette Valley, carry this distinction. This acknowledgment from the EU affirms and protects the Willamette Valley's reputation for quality. It also offers legal security and added protection in Europe and worldwide against fraudulent wines and outside producers attempting to profit from the Willamette Valley name.

As wine regions develop global recognition for quality, their success often carries with it the threat of tangential producers looking to capitalize on their marketing cachet. This can result in misleading labels and wines that aren't true to established regional protocols, styles and quality. EU recognition requires a detailed description of the unique location, inputs to processes and resultant qualities of wines to gain PGI status.

This recognition further extends the reach of the

HARRY PETERSON-NEDRY

Willamette Valley and its wines across the Atlantic, and through the EU's market channels, both locally and through trading partners worldwide. Outlining the benefits and responsibilities attached to the Valley's PGI approval, EU Ambassador to the U.S. Stavros Lambrinidis says, "As a registered Protected Geographical Indication, the Willamette Valley name is secured throughout the EU market of 27 countries counting 450 million consumers. Any operator seeking to sell non-originating wine using the registered Oregon name, or using labeling devices to evoke 'Willamette Valley' in the mind of the consumer, will be stopped."

He adds, "For the EU consumer, the PGI is the guarantee of authenticity: that every bottle meets the quality standard set by the Willamette producers."

Geographical Indications (GIs) represent the foundation of EU quality wines and spirits and of agricultural products and foodstuffs. Lambrinidis noted how producers of GIs attract higher prices and secure rights against counterfeits. And while GIs are a worldwide phenomenon, notably in Asia and Latin America, "It is still the EU certification that gives producers like Willamette their calling-card to key markets."

The Willamette Valley Wineries Association (WVWA) and other statewide organizations, with leadership from Harry Peterson-Nedry, have been advocating for wine region name protection for almost two decades.

Peterson-Nedry, founder of RR and Ridgecrest wineries, started pushing for the protection of wine region names in 2002. "I felt labeling and place name protection were principled tenets of what Oregon has always been and should be," he explains. "It offered recognition for the pioneers' priorities and principles, and for the ongoing desire to do the right thing for consumers. The reality is that some wine producers could unfairly appropriate the hard, historical work put in by others, by using their wine region names and cheating long-term both the wine industry and consumers."

Major strides were made in 2006 international wine trade negotiations to limit this activity,

Short on Labor

SCARCITY OF WORKERS LAYS GROUND FOR CHALLENGING HARVEST, CHANGING BIZ

BY PAUL OMUNDSON

Last year's outlier wine harvest took center stage during a pandemic and starred wildfires and smoke; it had its share of labor shortage issues, too. Mitigating circumstances, such as vineyard decisions to not pick as much as 40% of fruit, lessened labor pressures.

What about this year's harvest? What if 2021's yield is a stellar one with fire/smoke problems minimal? Will there be enough picking hands during crucial prime harvest times? Can a large enough crew be assembled on a day or two's notice?

The answer is unknown.

For years, Oregon's vineyard labor pool has ebbed and flowed, but, overall, it is shrinking. One key factor is generational. Older workers are retiring and doing so at a fairly rapid pace. These individuals have been loyal to the same vineyards continuously, all the while developing knowledge of particular terrain and intricate skills need for a job well done.

During harvest, a certain natural friction exists among older and younger workers; the latter often intent on building per-bucket earnings as fast as possible. Time is money, after all, but when the job is hurried, clean picking and quality can suffer.

With access to the latest job information via smartphones, seasonal workers instantly can identify where to land the best paying gigs. Consequently, crews can vanish quickly. Competing labor interests include neighboring wineries, a surging construction industry, other fruit, berry and vegetable operations, not to mention cannabis and even digging fire lines — both more lucrative prospects. And yet, a potentially high-yielding wine grape harvest has definite appeal, too.

Last year's blueberry harvest mainly competed with vineyard canopy management from June to August. Now, late-season berry picking extends straight into the wine grape harvest. "It's not cannabis that's killing us; it's blueberries," says Alex Sokol Blosser of Sokol Blosser Winery in Dayton; he's also the current president of the Oregon Winegrowers Association. "It used to be that harvest was in a sweet spot at a time when there was little competition. That's no longer true."

Regarding cannabis, Sokol Blosser is aware of under-the-table payment. "We're dealing with that through our legislators," he says. "We want them to put pressure on enforcing the laws and making this a level playing field."

SOLUTIONS

"We don't have the resources to farm many vineyards boutique style anymore," explains Daniel Fey, president of McMinnville-based Results Partners, Oregon's largest vineyard management operation. He suggests the answer is clear: "Larger vineyards in Oregon have to embrace mechanical solutions, now and in the future."

"Increased mechanization is the answer and a quick way to gain economies of scale." Currently, about one-third of the 2021 harvest executed by Results Partners will be picked by machine. "When it comes to mechanization, Oregon is light years behind other premium Pinot Noir-producing areas such as Europe or New Zealand. We have a lot of catch-up to do," Fey urges growers to design new vineyards or redesign existing ones to accommodate the needs of mechanical harvesters and other vineyard equipment.

Based in McMinnville, Results Partners manages more than 3,000 acres of vines for some 100 growers in Oregon. "Labor is front and center of what we do, and, at times, we've got caught short," Fey explains. "It's blueberries now that are mainly taking labor away from vineyards. A fast picker can make up to $350 in six hours of work picking blueberries, or more than double what someone working in a vineyard for 10 hours can get."

Fey explains how cannabis remains a major challenge in Southern Oregon, crippling the vineyard workforce in the Rogue and Umpqua valleys. "It pays $20 an hour under the table. We can't compete with that. And it's not legal. Aside from being a vineyard management company, we're also a farm labor contractor. We follow the law and play by the rules."

Fortunately, the call for mechanization gradually is being heard. For example, Sokol Blosser Winery, after celebrating its 50th anniversary, bought its first mechanical harvester this year. Approximately 90 acres of estate grapes previously hand-picked

Smoke Study

RESEARCH BOOSTED BY GRANT

BY OWP STAFF

Oregon State University researchers and a team of West Coast university collaborators have received a $7.65 million grant to study the impact of smoke exposure on grapes, a project that will provide critical knowledge to grapegrowers and winery owners severely impacted by widespread wildfire smoke in recent years.

Oregon State researchers will work with scientists at Washington State University and the University of California, Davis, on the four-year project, funded by the USDA's National Institute of Food and Agriculture.

"Smoke events are only likely to increase, and last year made it clear we need to be better prepared," says Elizabeth Tomasino, associate professor of enology at Oregon State and lead researcher on the grant. "This research will go a long way in providing tools that will allow the grape and wine industries to quickly make decisions that significantly impact their economic livelihoods."

The grape and wine industry contributes $220 billion to the U.S. economy, and wine grapes are the highest value fruit crop in the country, according to WineAmerica, a Washington, D.C.-based group representing the wine industry.

Wildfires remain a significant threat to these industries as persistent exposure to smoke compromises the quality and value of wine grapes and adversely affects wines. That danger is particularly pronounced on the West Coast, where California, Oregon and Washington reign as three of the nation's top four wine-producing states.

An economic analysis of the 2020 wildfires estimated losses up to $3.7 billion, a number that will be felt into at least 2023 as many wineries have decided against producing wine from 2020 grapes due to the severity of impacts from wildfire smoke.

In the wake of the challenging 2020 vintage, the West Coast grape and wine industry wants to better understand how smoke density and composition impact grapes, grapevines, wine composition and sensory perception of the wine in a glass. The research team is calling this a "smoke to glass" understanding.

With the grant, the team seeks to: 1 Develop new technologies and establish low-cost sensors and sensor networks for real-time risk assessment in the vineyard; 2 assess the impact of smoke exposure on the health of grapes and grapevines; 3 develop grape coatings to reduce or eliminate uptake of smoke components into grapes; 4 optimize a rapid small-batch fermentation method to predict what a wine impacted by smoke will taste like when fermented on a commercial scale; 5 determine sensory quality thresholds of smoke compounds in wine; 6 link environmental, chemical and sensory data to create predictive modeling of smoke risk to grape and wine quality; and 7 create an integrated outreach component to communicate the research findings and their use, and enable the industry to benefit from them.

The grant builds on other recent smoke-taint research efforts at Oregon State.

Last fall, researchers, including Tomasino and other members of the Oregon Wine Research Institute, housed at Oregon State, quickly mobilized to process more than 600 grape samples and 800 wine samples from state growers, using gas chromatography mass

Jim Bernau

Willamette Valley Vineyards

BY ANNELISE KELLY

It's tough to beat Jim Bernau for longevity in the local wine industry. Long before he founded Willamette Valley Vineyards (WVV) in 1983 — before he began shaving or even learned to drive — he made his first batch, fermenting Concord grape juice he snuck from his mom's freezer.

His can-do spirit has served him well over the intervening years; likewise, his achievements have helped advance the Oregon wine world for nearly four decades, including over the last bustling year. Bernau's list of current projects, during a pandemic no less, is what has earned the industry leader the Oregon Wine Press 2021 Person of the Year.

Bernau's leadership and innovations continue to make a major impact on Oregon viticulture and winemaking. In fact, OWP isn't the only publication heaping accolades on the man: Portland Business Journal named him 2021 Executive of the Year, and only five years prior, Wine Enthusiast nominated him for Person of the Year in 2016.

Not only can you find Bernau and WVV in print, but broadcast, as well. Most recently, Bernau appeared on local news, announcing his plan to pay farm workers overtime and raise their wages. In addition, this summer, the winery made an appearance on national TV, as Bravo's "Top Chef: Portland" aired its season finale at the Turner estate.

Meanwhile, as the pandemic persists, WVV has perfected the pivot but with innovation in mind, of course. The winery has accommodated the "new normal" with transparent domes placed on the estate's outdoor terraces, ensuring four-season hospitality.

Inside the winery, guests can witness yet another clever creation: WVV's Pinot Noir Clonal Blending Experience. Guided by a winery ambassador, up to eight participants can blend their very own Pinot; the system documents the blends for customers' future reference.

Innovation abounds behind the scenes, too. During the summer of 2021, WVV teamed up with Saga Robotics, Cornell University and USDA scientists at Oregon State University to introduce ultraviolet light technology in the vineyards to combat powdery mildew.

You might think Bernau has earned some rest, but he's just getting started. Tireless in his mission to spread the word about the magic and mystery of Oregon wine, he keeps plenty of irons in the fire.

OWP had a conversation with him about what's coming at WVV, his past accomplishments and the values of the Oregon wine industry, generally and the winery specifically.

Taking It on the Road

A recurring expression in our conversation, "taking it on the road," also can be found on the company website. He first uttered the phrase when discussing the various expansions WVV has accomplished, are on the drawing board or are under construction.

In addition to the Turner estate, WVV has established a number of tasting rooms, including Tualatin Estate Vineyard in Forest Grove, downtown McMinnville and Maison Bleue in Walla Walla, Washington. Bernau says,

"So, then we thought, 'Okay, let's continue to take this on the road, but let's take it to places that aren't just in wine country.' So, we established a micro winery near Sacramento. I think it's the first time an Oregon winery has actually established a winery presence in California; it's kind of flowed the other way in our history."

Called Willamette Wineworks in Folsom, California, the new winery represents just the tip of the proverbial expansion iceberg. Not only is Bernau taking wine on the road, but food, as well. In 2022, four tasting room/restaurants are expected to open, plus a much-anticipated sparkling estate that will present a pairing-inspired menu.

First, the bubbles. Domaine Willamette at Bernau Estate Vineyard in the Dundee Hills will be one of only a few Oregon wineries dedicated solely to world-class méthode traditionnelle sparkling wines. Expect local-inspired hospitality with food pairings, stunning views, educational tours and beautiful gardens, along with Biodynamically farmed grapes.

In four different cities, WVV will open its new culinary destinations. The Lake Oswego Tasting Room & Restaurant will feature an attractive trellis patio with an outdoor fire pit, a private wine cellar dining room, wine lockers and ample parking. The Vancouver Waterfront Tasting Room & Restaurant, located directly above the Maryhill Tasting Room & Bistro, boasts lofty views of the Columbia River. As the first Oregon winery represented among a cluster of seven Washington winery tasting rooms, it will include barrel booth seating, the barrel blending system and a spacious patio overlooking the river. The Happy Valley Tasting Room & Restaurant, just southeast of Portland, will feature a large outdoor patio and water feature. And lastly, look for another Tasting Room & Restaurant in historic downtown Bend.

Looking to the Future, Honoring the Past

When invited to share more about the sparkling wine project, Bernau immediately launched into the importance of respecting geographic names.

"If you go back and look at Oregon's history and why Oregon has had so much success, some of the reasons are grounded in Oregon winemakers' sensitivity and respect for others. The winemakers in France who have these powerful geographic designations have tailored their farms and winemaking rules to produce really high-quality [wines] and have attached their geographic designation names to those rules. For example, Bourgogne (Burgundy) and Champagne — those mean something as brands, as geographic-designated brands.”

In terms of the WVV sparkling project, Bernau Estate, he explains, “We now are calling the approach we’re using, which is fermented in the bottle, méthode traditionnelle.”

Why not méthode Champenoise? Bernau explains, “The French are saying, ‘Hey, please respect even the use of Champenoise.’ Of course, in Oregon, we have a law established in 1977 that was requested by the Oregon winemakers, which was about respect for other geographical designation names.

That’s one of the reasons why the French took such a liking to Oregon winemakers; they were the first Americans to go to their government and say, we want to respect French law.

“You think about, what was one of the great tipping points in the development of high-quality wine in Oregon? It was the support of the French in providing our early winemakers with clones, and, of course, the predominant ones are the Dijon clones.”

Bernau remains dedicated to making superior sparkling wine, citing Oregon weather, which “gives us the opportunity to ripen Pinot Noir, Chardonnay and Pinot Meunier, and develop aromas and flavors in the fruit at lower sugar levels. That’s our relatively cool climate of the north Willamette Valley. When you make these sparkling wines, you’re picking grapes at like 18 Brix, far below your target of 24, let’s say, for making Pinot Noir.”

He continues, “And that is one of the north Willamette’s secrets that I think wine consumers are now discovering. Brian Croser and Rollin Soles were among the first to really tell that story well, through Argyle Winery. And now others are doing it, including ourselves with the help of people like Andrew Davis and others. For us, this is an exciting way to continue to tell the Oregon story. ... Wine consumers around the world are just learning about what Oregon is capable of.”

Sharing the Story

Perhaps having been captivated by the stories told so eloquently by the powerhouse winemaking regions in Europe, Bernau fully recognizes the power of narrative to engage the minds, hearts and souls as well as the palates of wine drinkers.

Sharing the Oregon story and “taking it on the road” are foundational values for Bernau. He effortlessly weaves them together, too, referring back to the restaurant concepts, he says, “We are just beginning to tell the Oregon wine story through these tasting room/restaurants. We have like 272 employees now; we will have 500 employees in two years.

“Who knows what will happen? What kind of curve ball the economy will be throwing [in the future]? But if things go right, it’s possible that in 10 years, we could have 4,000 employees all out there telling the story of Oregon wine quality and Oregon’s values, which include respecting each other, collaborating with each other, and protecting and being good stewards of the land, as well as their communities.

“Why is it that Oregon wine is growing faster in sales in the United States than any wine grown in any other region of the country or the world? Well, I think it starts with what I mentioned before, the really high standards that were set right by our founders in 1977 and adherence to those standards of high quality, which has led to remarkable values that consumers receive in terms of quality and price. And consumers want to support winemakers who collaborate, who work together, who treat each other fairly, who support their communities and believe in the value of stewardship.”

Bernau continues, “We’re just beginning. People forget that the Willamette Valley is the size of the state of Connecticut. You go to Napa or Sonoma, these are small growing regions compared to just the Willamette Valley. And then you look at Oregon, the 10th largest state in the union, which has growing regions similar to Spain, or similar to Italy, or similar to Bordeaux, or the Rhône. We have them all. We’re just a little part of it and just love being a part of it.”

Upholding Core Values

Having covered the respect and sensitivity the nascent Oregon wine community displayed for geographic designated brands, the conversation turns toward other ideals, especially sustainability.

“We’re actually one of the founders of LIVE, and are deeply devoted to the program.” LIVE is a third-party independently certified set of sustainable practices for winegrowers in the Pacific Northwest. In addition to focusing on responsible stewardship of the land, it also values community and social issues such as worker health, and safety and good neighbor policies.

“That’s probably the one thing that I value the most: my colleagues giving me their founder’s award. I think it was the very first program of its kind in U.S. agriculture. Oregon now has among the highest percentage of vineyards in the world that are sustainably certified under such strict conditions. It’s just something that we think is really needed, and hopefully, we’ll continue to spread the good word.”

The values of stewardship and community take us to another tangent: the importance of using natural cork in bottles as cork forests in the Mediterranean sequester carbon. Bernau explains, “I believe the cork forests of the Mediterranean are second only to the Amazon in their importance.” The cork industry also supports hundreds of villages and protects habitat for the endangered Iberian lynx.

It’s a good thing Bernau has abundant energy. He’s not one to sit on his laurels, many of which we haven’t even mentioned yet: Oregon’s first crowd-funded business. The first publicly traded winery. A game-changing partnership with Oregon State University and the Oregon Legislative Assembly to launch a world-class fermentation science program. The list goes on...

Terms like maverick, visionary and go-getter stumble toward cliché territory, but in Jim Bernau, they’re chapter headings in his accomplished life stories, all worthy of further exploration. ■ with Gun and Camera.”

Post-academia, he enjoyed a career in spirits distribution. He also worked in television for most of the '90s, helping build a 24-hour cable news channel. After moving to the wine-soaked Golden State, his lifelong interest in wine transformed into a passion for writing about the beverage and reviewing bottles as well. He was the wine editor of California Homes Magazines and freelanced with wine publications, including Oregon Wine Press.

A major motivation for his final migration to Portland was “extensive field research” focused on the early pioneers of Oregon wines and the emergence of Pinot Noir in the Willamette Valley. Ken’s book “Decoding the Grape: Oregon Wine Country Stories” is based on his wide-ranging interviews over a period of several years.

In his later years, his visual disability, late-onset Stargardt disease, became progressively worse but never stopped his interest in good books — via audio — and traveling, especially in pursuit of fine wine. ■ planted,” he continued. “But we haven’t been able to get our arms around those differences and come up with a grand unified explanation that would help everyone make sense of the differences we see in our wines. And we need to do that if those people are to appreciate the wines from our appellation.” The project will spend the next six years trying figure out the nuances of a real explanation.

David and the marketing team created Founders’ Stories, commemorating the winery’s anniversary. For the 10-part video and podcast series, he personally conducted extensive interviews with owners from the other nine founding wineries in the Willamette Valley.

“It was an incredibly fun project in that I was forced into talking about the industry with each of these 10 individuals, or couples, over a historic period, not just about what we’re going to do next week,” he said. “You don’t usually get the opportunity to talk to people you’ve known for 50-plus years in that way.” The winery released one episode a month in 2021. Over the course of the year, the company released several commemorative wines.

David remains optimistic about what the future holds for the company. It has a passionate steward in

Lynn Loacker — Jack passed away in 2020 — and a line of products admired throughout the world. Between the Founders’ Stories project and his own work to tell the company’s story, he and his colleagues are hard at work to ensure the company stays top of mind in the wine world and can remain a leader and innovator for the next 50 years. ■

Sokol Blosser 50th

the business,” Susan said. “But they all grew up in the vineyard, and they said, ‘The vineyard is in our blood.’” Middle son Alex Sokol Blosser started working with his mother in 1998. Alison Sokol Blosser, the youngest child, joined the family business in 2004. Oldest son Nik Blosser doesn’t work for the company but is still involved at the board level.

It didn’t take Susan long to figure out that her kids weren’t biding their time at the winery; they wanted to run it someday. In 2004, the company began a three-year leadership transition. At the end of that process, “The family board decided to make them co-presidents because they rose at the same level,” she said. “They both seemed so competent, but they were very different.” Alex also serves as winemaker, while CEO Alison handles more of the business side of the winery.

“Alex and I love what we do,” said Alison. “This is the only thing that we’re ever going to do with our lives. We have a very strong connection to the business and really view ourselves as stewards.”

Right now, she has her sights focused on growing the business and adapting it so it continues to meet the needs of modern consumers. “People are consuming wine differently — especially with the pandemic — and those purchasing patterns are here to stay,” Alison added. “While our heart is always going to be in producing amazing small-production Dundee Hills wines, we’re excited to also provide wines at a great price in a great package.”

In 2020, the company began selling its Evolution wines in boxes for the first time. The winery also continues its curbside pick-up and delivery, and is investing more in e-commerce and communicating with people in new ways. “I’m excited to continue to push the envelope in terms of over-delivering to consumers what they want and how they want it,” said Alison.

Instead of throwing a 50th anniversary, the company has been looking at how it can help people enjoy wine at home. In February, the winery hosted its “1970s flash sale,” Alison explained. “We took one of our Pinot Noirs and sold it for 24 hours at the same price as our first bottling.” At $6.75 a bottle, they were sold out in less than a few hours. Club members and other customers were invited to virtual tastings events where family members shared old stories and talked about the winery.

Susan’s plans for the future include continuing her role as founder and staying involved in organizations such as the Yamhill Enrichment Society, a nonprofit she established to improve the lives of Yamhill County children through literacy and music.

Meanwhile, Alison is committed to keeping alive the gifts her parents gave the family and the state of Oregon so that future generations of her family have the same opportunities. “Fifty years from now, I hope whoever you’re interviewing from my family is saying something similar.” ■ but more work is needed to ensure wine regions have the tools to protect themselves in a globalizing market. Recent use of wine in erecting trade barriers for other industries’ goods has raised again the need for addressing wine trade issues.

“Covering each other’s back, as this PGI protection does, is a step in the right direction,” Peterson-Nedry continues. The WVWA, in its mission to promote, preserve and advance the prestige of Oregon’s Willamette Valley AVA (American Viticultural Area) and its wines, has worked to defend its appellation and nested AVAs from companies seeking to mis-designate appellation names for wines not produced using grapes grown in the Willamette Valley.

The EU recognized the Napa Valley’s GI status in 2007, two years after the California region was a signatory — with Oregon and six other global wine regions — to the Declaration to Protect Wine Place & Origin. The group of signatories has been growing in size since 2005. Now named the Wine Origins Alliance, the organization represents regions spanning 11 countries, working to protect regional names and eliminate all barriers to trade in wine.

WVWA and Peterson-Nedry worked closely with the Wine Origins Alliance to achieve this latest regional milestone for the Willamette Valley. “The global wine industry is built on distinct regional names such as Willamette Valley, and this decision is an acknowledgment that location truly does matter when it comes to wine,” says Jennifer Hall, director of the Wine Origins Alliance. “Consumers around the world deserve truthful and accurate wine labels, and this is a major step forward for not only Willamette Valley but the whole wine industry in ensuring consumers are not misled.” ■

will be machine harvested for the 2021 vintage. “I need to pick at exactly the right time, and having the harvester lets us do that. It relieves a lot of pressure,” Sokol Blosser says.

For now, Jessica Cortell, owner of Vitis Terra Vineyard Services in Amity, will continue picking by hand. “Our crews pick night and day once harvest starts,” she explains. “Picking at night allows us to source additional labor not available during the day and to bring us more fruit in a 48-hour time frame.”

One of the major labor challenges in the Oregon wine industry remains Pinot Noir’s propensity to ripen in the same time-frame. Cortell suggests, “In the short-term, wineries planning their harvest can help by spreading it out over three to five days, with 20 to 30 tons a day to maintain a stable harvest crew rather than waiting to the last minute and then wanting to pick 80 tons the day before a rain.”

Winemaker Brent Stone, COO of King Estate Winery outside Eugene, points to longstanding relationships with labor contractors and precise planning “to meet our needs to this point. There’s always concerns at harvest overlapping with other wineries and crops,” he says, “but we’re hopeful we’ll have a sufficient crew to make our harvest goals this year.”

The majority of the estate’s vines, totaling 480 acres, will be machine-picked, but the use of mechanization “varies depending on vintage,” Stone explains. “If there’s a lot of disease pressure, then we try to hand-pick as much as possible, so we can drop moldy clusters in the vineyard.”

Much of King Estate’s vineyard maintenance throughout the year is still performed by hand — pruning, adjusting canopy support, fruit thinning — including the harvest of Pinot Noir. Stone explains, “We try to hand-pick all our estate Pinot Noir because it’s a delicate grape prone to skin damage. That’s less of a factor with Pinot Gris as we are able to press quickly so we’ll machine harvest more of it.

“Traditionally, I think most wine-makers will say you can make a better wine with hand-picked fruit. It’s a cleaner, gentler pick. But that’s starting to change with advances in vineyard mechanization and technology.” ■ directed by the gas station attendant to the Maresh house instead.

Jim was always there, the ambassador of the Dundee Hills for new acquaintances and friends of 50 years. Jim and Loie were the backbone of the Red Hills community, often hosting legendary barn potlucks after harvest in the early years, followed by neighborhood weddings, funerals and celebrations.

As a child in the early '70s, I stood in our fledgling vineyard that we had purchased from Jim. I watered the cuttings from David Lett, Charles Coury and Dick Erath. At the time, Dundee was a town of 400 people and — unimaginable today — a speed trap.

A few years later, I walked into our house at the vineyard after summer camp wondering where my parents were and instead found a front-page News-Register article showing our family granary in flames. I burst into tears. At the door, Jim and Loie magically appeared to console me with Loie's famous cherry pie and beloved Springer Spaniels. Meanwhile, my parents soldiered themselves to face the smoldering embers.

Jim looked down at me astride his John Deere tractor when I was researching the May 2015 Oregon Wine Press cover story.

"What kind of tractor is your favorite, Jim?" I asked him.

"Well, Kerry, it's green; that's all there are, green ones," he said.

I dedicated my first book, "Vineyard Memoirs" to Jim and Loie, who encouraged me to write the stories of our early grapegrowing endeavors and industry collaborations.

Jim and Loie's daughter, Martha, and her husband, Steve Mikame, now manage the vineyard and Red Barn Tasting Room, along with third-generation winemaker Jimmy Arterberry-Maresh.

It's comforting to know the family will continue driving the John Deere, operating the Red Barn and carrying on a legacy of a life well spent. And, undoubtedly, keeping in touch with the Geezers. ■

Throughout her cancer journey, Maria proved herself far more than a business owner, community leader, marketer, writer, entertainer, chef, mother and wife; she demonstrated incredible strength as she dealt with the constant challenges of the disease, while continuing to run the business and develop Daffodil Hill Vineyard. Purchased in 2018, this was the Stuarts' first vineyard holding and Maria was actively involved in renovating the property's farmhouse. This special place, its lush gardens and Valley views, provided Maria a sense of peace during her most difficult hours.

Her family, friends, community and the Oregon wine industry deeply mourn the passing of Maria. Any contributions can be made in her name to ¡Salud! The Oregon Pinot Noir Auction, McMinnville Community Action Partnership or the McMinnville Education Foundation.

She is survived by her husband and children, sister Lisa and brothers Paul and Peter, as well as 13 nieces and nephews who adored her. ■ vineyard the largest in Oregon — today, Knudsen farms 125 acres of vines. Erath built a winery in the basement of his house at Knudsen Vineyards, where he produced his first 216 cases of wine in 1972, under his eponymous label.

Knudsen 50th

By 1974, the tanks for Erath's winery had spilled out of the house and onto the grounds. The winery wasn't the only venture growing: With 60 acres of grape vines beginning to mature, Knudsen and Erath could foresee a glut of fruit looming. In 1975, they formed a partnership to build a new winery on the property. The following year, Knudsen Erath Winery opened its doors.

That partnership continued until 1987, when Knudsen connected with Australians interested in producing sparkling wine in Oregon; they needed grapes. The site's elevation range of 500 to 1,000 feet presented an ideal fit. "Dad was a Champagne fanatic," Knudsen Cowles said, owing to his early travels in France. It didn't take long for him to decide to work with Aussie Brian Croser and Texas native Rollin Soles with the Dundee Wine Company, known today as Argyle Winery. "He told them, 'I would love to be your founding vineyard.'"

At that point, Knudsen and Erath parted ways, and Knudsen diverted all the fruit to the Dundee Wine Company/Argyle, which continues to receive most of the grapes. Erath bought the buildings, leased the five-acre property under them and continued to make wine there until 2006, when he sold the brand to Washington-based Chateau Ste. Michelle.

Erath wines continued production on the property after 2006, but the Knudsen family never intended for it to be a long-term arrangement.

"Back in 2006, when our father — at our urging — went in and talked to Ted Baseler (the former CEO of Chateau Ste. Michelle), he welcomed them to the property, encouraged them to do good business and told them we would not renew the lease when it expired," recalled Knudsen Cowles. On March 31, 2020, the unusual arrangement lasting more than 30 years ended, giving the family, once again, complete dominion over their property.

What an exciting moment for the four Knudsen siblings, who'd always been dedicated to keeping the property in the family — Julia Lee passed away in 1990; Cal died in 2009. "We had known about this arrangement for 12 years, and in the last four or five, we'd been anticipating this transition and planning for the first-ever Knudsen Vineyards tasting room for our wines," said Knudsen Cowles.

In 2012, the Knudsen family returned to winemaking, working with Argyle to produce the wine and collaborating on blending decisions for the second generation's first label. At that time, the siblings also decided to sell grapes to a few select winemakers in addition to Argyle. The brand continues to produce bottlings of Pinot Noir, Chardonnay and rosé; the first sparkling wine is expected in 2023. Buyers can drink the wine at home or sip in The Outlook at Knudsen Vineyards, located in the renovated building previously housing the Knudsen Erath winery and tasting room.

Knudsen Cowles explained how her family originally planned to build a brand-new tasting room farther up the hill, where the view of the vineyard and surrounding valley would be even more impressive. "But the builders said, 'Why wait a year? We could renovate the existing tasting room and you could be open as soon as a couple months later, while we build the new one,'" she said.

Ultimately, the family decided that focusing on renovating the storied building on the property made better sense. The decision soon seemed particularly prescient as the COVID-19 pandemic struck and upended the wine industry. The renovation work continued, though; the tasting room began welcoming guests in 2020.

Visitors to the tasting room can learn about the property's history, make an appointment for a guided hike through the vineyard, and possibly enjoy the wines while possibly sitting at a family heirloom: a 14-foot, three-plank French walnut farm table where the Knudsen kids ate many meals as children.

"When our father passed away, it was in his second home in California,"

Knudsen Cowles said. "My brothers and I looked at that table and said, 'Someday, that's going to be in our tasting room.'"

A family friend kept it for several years, but when the tasting room opened, the family paid to ship it back to Oregon. Knudsen Cowles shed tears of joy the day it landed in its new home. "People love being at the table," she said. "You look at the table, and you can tell it has some stories to tell."

These charming returns to tradition are important to the family. On Sept. 18, they hope to host a harvest party as their parents did in the 1970s. "In those days, if you came, you were given a pair of clippers and a basket and sent out to pick grapes," remembered Knudsen Cowles. "Then you came back and drank wine." Tickets for the celebration will be on sale later this year, barring COVID-related complications.

Some of these traditions are likely to continue into a third generation. One of Cal and Julia's eight grandchildren is working in the wine industry in Washington. "All of (the third) generation is very interested in what's going on," said Knudsen Cowles. "They love that this is part of their family."

She's certain her parents would be proud of their children's ongoing commitment to and stewardship of their passion project. "We know our parents would be thrilled to have us working together in the way we are. All four kids are owners, and we're remarkably aligned in what we want to do," she said. "We all feel so lucky to have inherited this historic vineyard, and we are very eager to share it with other people. It's such a special place." ■ spectrometers to analyze the types and levels of smoke compounds.

In June, the Oregon Legislature approved $2.6 million to fund an Oregon State testing lab to assess the impact of wildfire smoke on wine grapes, orchard fruit and other crops.

The work planned with the new grant augments previous research by the same team and is made possible by funding from the American Vineyard Foundation, Northwest Center for Small Fruits Research and the USDA's National Institute of Food and Agriculture.

Other Oregon State researchers involved with the new project include: Alec Levin, James Sterns, Yanyun Zhao and James Osborne, all of whom are part of the College of Agricultural Sciences or Oregon State University Extension Service. ■
