Past Reflections, Future Visions

A LOOK BACK AND AHEAD

BY MICHELE FRANCISCO

When a new year begins, it's customary to reflect on the past and set goals for the future. Since starting in May, I'm beginning to feel more settled in my editor role and its countless responsibilities. While I have many ambitions, my primary focuses are to: 1.) publish informative, compelling stories; 2.) showcase wineries around the state, thereby embracing our publication name "Oregon" Wine Press; and 3.) include more people and projects celebrating diversity, innovation and sustainability.

I could not have successfully accomplished these goals without help from our many trusted freelancers. It takes a village to create every issue. Although I have many favorites, I've chosen seven articles, one from each month of my tenure, that best illustrate my objectives.

June– Remy at the Reins: Remy Drabkin, Winemaker, McMinnville's mayor, creator of Queer Wine Fest, founder of Wine Country Pride and inventor of Drabkin Mead Formulation, a carbon-negative concrete.

July– All for One: Examples of Oregon wineries showing their appreciation and caring for their workers.

August– Feeling Loopy?: Highlighting the wineries– plus a brewery and cidery– on Hood River's Fruit Loop trail in the Columbia Gorge.

September– Harvesting Experience: Spotlighting nonprofit Our Legacy Harvested and the program's BIPOC harvest interns. (Watch for a follow-up article in next month's issue.)

October– Trial By Fire: Sharing the story of how wildfire smoke challenged grape growers and winemakers during our 2020 harvest.

November– Dames of the Rogue: Introducing ten women influencing Southern Oregon wine.

December– Phoenix Rising: The story of a couple who lost everything in Southern Oregon's Almeda Fire and how they are creatively re-envisioning their businesses.

Thanks to you for reading each issue and sending your comments to me. I continue to welcome your opinions on these articles, along with ideas you'd like explored in upcoming issues. Contact me at michele@oregonwinepress.com.

While looking forward to a bright future, I wish the same for you. Oregon's wine industry is a dynamic one, filled with people passionate about what they do. I am honored and humbled to share their stories. As I begin to hit my stride in 2023, expect more comprehensive coverage of creative individuals and unique wines produced in our state. Thank you for reading. ■

CELEBRATING COLLEAGUES LOST IN 2022

Larry Preedy

BY OWP STAFF

Airlie Winery founder Larry Preedy died from COPD Jan. 19, 2022, at his home in Keizer.

He was born Jan. 11, 1939, in Satanta, Kansas, to Clarence and Ethel Preedy. Raised on a farm near Liberal, Kansas, he graduated from the town's high school in 1956; four years later, he married Alice Jacobs.

Larry worked as a welder and in the oil fields while farming with his father. He also served in the National Guard. In 1967, he and Alice started their own farm, growing irrigated alfalfa, wheat and milo, and raising cattle. He also owned a trucking business hauling cattle and grain.

In 1977, Larry and Alice moved to Oregon, a risky decision as they had no definite plans; within a few months, they purchased an excavation business and settled in Philomath. Farmers at heart, they purchased land near Airlie, planting 20,000 Christmas trees. After the trees were harvested, they established the 40-acre Dunn Forest Vineyard in 1983 and founded Airlie Winery in 1986. He served on the board of the Oregon Winegrowers Association. The winery was sold to Mary Olson in 1997.

Not afraid to take chances, Larry enjoyed challenges and worked hard for his many successes. His family says he would lend a hand without being asked, was honest and upheld a high level of integrity. He could also build, repair, paint, modify and fix just about anything.

Larry enjoyed hunting in Kansas and Eastern Oregon, and target shooting at gun clubs. He also built and raced micro midgets, dune buggies and flew model airplanes.

Truly, a jack of all trades.

He is survived by his wife of 61 years, Alice (Jacobs) Preedy; children Steve (Mimi) Preedy, Kathy (Henry) Gowen and Jennifer (Scott) Henry; seven grandchildren; seven great-grandchildren; and sister Jan Black. He was preceded in death by his brother, Tim Preedy.

Daughter Jennifer continues his wine legacy as the co-owner of Season Cellars with Scott Henry. ■

Russell Rainey

BY OWP STAFF

Russell Rainey, founder of Evesham Wood Vineyard and Winery near Salem, died July 9. He was 70.

Rainey was born February 1, 1952, in Monroe, Louisiana. Soon afterward, his family relocated to Pine Bluff, Arkansas, where he lived until graduating high school. While studying German at Westminster College in Fulton, Missouri, Rainey spent his junior year abroad in Germany, developing an appreciation for the wines made in Baden and Alsace.

After graduating college, he moved to St. Louis, Missouri, here he planted grapevines and managed Cheshire Cellars, a wine shop inside The Cheshire Inn, a local landmark. One evening, while having dinner with friends, Rainey met Mary Ann Mattingly, a young server. The two fell in love and married in Fulton.

Hoping to work in the Pacific Northwest's fledgling wine industry, they moved to Portland, Oregon, where Rainey worked in the wine wholesale business. In 1984, he also assisted late owner, Rachel Starr, open Great Wine Buys, now considered Portland's oldest independent wine shop.

During the mid-1980s, while the Raineys were searching for ideal vineyard property, he accepted the role of Adams Winery's winemaker. His first vintage was in 1984, made in Adams' Northwest Portland location, the city's first urban winery. After purchasing land on the outskirts of Salem, the couple established Evesham Wood Vineyard and Winery in 1986.

The winery responsibilities were easily divided; Mary ran the business while Russ made the wine. Rainey adopted many grape growing and winemaking techniques used in Burgundy, but still uncommon in Oregon. He chose not to filter Evesham Wood wines, nor irrigate his grapevines. Passionate about dry farming practices, Rainey established the Dry Roots Coalition, or DRC, a group and philosophy increasingly popular from the outset.

The Raineys eventually decided to grow their family; son Aidan was born in June 1997.

After 24 vintages, Rainey retired in 2010. He found a willing and adept successor, Erin Nuccio, his longtime intern. Nuccio and wife Jordan have expanded Evesham Woods' market presence since taking over the business.

Rainey suffered from Frontotemporal Dementia, a rare neurological brain disease that ultimately took his life. He chose to donate his brain to the Oregon Brain Bank at Oregon Health & Science University. Memorial donations may be made to The Association for Frontotemporal Degeneration: www.classy.org/give/381228/#!?donation/checkout or OHSU Foundation, in the name of Layton Aging and Alzheimer's Disease Research Center. ■

Allen Methven

BY STARLA POINTER

Allen Methven, founder of Methven Family Vineyards near Dayton and a longtime dentist, died March 14. He was 74.

He and his wife, Jill, planted Chardonnay, Pinot Noir, Pinot Gris, Gamay Noir and Riesling near their home in the Eola Hills in 2002. "We are in an area that grows the most beautiful wine in the world and we wanted to be a part of it," he told the McMinnville News-Register last year.

Methven was born Sept. 29, 1947, in Renton, Washington, a fraternal twin. He served in the Air Force and Army during the Vietnam era. After working as a military dental hygienist, he put himself through dental school.

He was a dentist in Michigan when he met his future wife, a business consultant. She admits she initially said "no" when he asked her out. But he persisted. She relented, and after a few dates, he moved to Oregon and they married.

Methven opened a practice in Dundee, one of about 17 he started over the years. He retired from dentistry last year.

He was well-loved by employees, in both his dental practice and the winery, his wife says. Heidi Moreland, general manager at the winery, describes him as "the kindest, most gentle man" with a great sense of humor. "He was a storyteller," Moreland added. "He could spin a tale in a way that made you want to keep listening."

When the family announced his death this week, condolences poured in from Michigan and other parts of the country, including Hawaii, where the Methvens often spent their winters.

Over the years, he was involved in many community and wine industry organizations. He traveled to Guatemala several times with Rotary groups to help with dental clinics, mentoring dental students on those trips, as well.

Jill Methven says her husband was "one of a kind" who positively impacted many lives, including those of their blended family. "He was an unpretentious, humble soul," she said, and "a brilliant man" who loved playing host at parties.

In addition to spending time among the vines, he planted 600 blueberry plants and kept bees. He enjoyed being in the woods, fishing, hunting and traveling.

Although ill, he made his annual moose hunting trip to Nova Scotia with friends last year, along with other trips on his "bucket list," his wife said. ■

AT LONG LAST

Lower Long Tom declared Oregon's 22nd AVA

Feature by Sophia McDonald
Photos by Kathryn Elsesser

When Dieter Boehm first visited the Willamette Valley in the 1970s, he noticed striking similarities with some of Germany's top winegrowing regions. He, of course, wasn't the only person postulating that Oregon could grow world-class Pinot Noir at the time. The difference was his location, in the rolling hills just outside Eugene.

Boehm started planting grapes at what would become High Pass Winery in 1984, the same time other vineyards, including Pfeiffer Winery (planted in 1982) and Hinman Vineyard (planted in 1979 and now known as Silvan Ridge), were planting grapevines in Lane County. He became acquainted with the other growers, many of whom lived on family farms while producing outstanding wine. Yet, he watched with dismay as time and again the southern Willamette Valley was mostly ignored by the media.

"We were sort of the stepchild of Willamette Valley viticulture, and I didn't think that was right," he explains. "After I grew grapes here for 20 years, I knew we were different. Our fruit was showing excellent quality all around."

Several years ago, spurred by Boehm, a loose-knit group known as the Prairie Mountain Wineries began talking about establishing an AVA (American Viticultural Area) west of Junction City and south of Monroe. "We really had been producing some excellent Pinot Noir and Pinot Gris, yet the southern Willamette Valley had been continuously overlooked as a premium grape-growing area," says Danuta Pfeiffer, co-owner of Pfeiffer Winery with husband Robin. She notes a major U.S. wine magazine once published a map showing the Willamette Valley ended near Salem. "Because we weren't near a large metropolitan area like Portland, it was hard for us to get attention."

The group believed an AVA — a widely-recognized designation that would define for the world what made the region special — might help. Boehm wrote the application with support from other growers in the region. They called the area the Lower Long Tom after the Long Tom River, a tributary of the Willamette River — the region is loosely shaped around the river's route below Fern Ridge Reservoir.

The AVA application, submitted to the U.S. Alcohol and Tobacco Tax and Trade Bureau in 2017, was approved Nov. 10 and went into effect Dec. 10. "It was really a great Christmas present for all of us down here," says Pfeiffer.

As a winegrowing region, the Lower Long Tom contains two important distinctions. The AVA sits in a rain shadow thanks to 3,000-foot Prairie Mountain and some of the Coast Range's taller peaks, blocking some of the cold weather from the Pacific Ocean.

The soil in this area is also different from many sites in the Willamette Valley. "It's predominantly Bellpine, a sedimentary soil that is not very deep — maybe three feet —and has a limited water-holding capacity," says Boehm. "The vineyards grown on that soil have to search and go deep into the substrate to make it through the season. I think that gives our wines a certain tannin structure that makes them really ageable and have a really good potential for showing after five, six or seven years."

Pinot Noir is the main variety grown in the AVA, but there are numerous white varieties planted, including Chardonnay, Pinot Gris, Riesling and Sauvignon Blanc. There are 12 wineries and 24 vineyards in side the relatively large region, which covers 25,000 acres.

Stephen Hagen, owner of Antiquum Farm, believes the AVA's size allows for unique expressions even within the defined area. "The Lower Long Tom contains some of the warmest, more advanced-ripening sites in the Willamette Valley, but also some incredibly cool, late-ripening sites. The common denominator of the Bellpine soils creates grapevines with more open canopies that produce grapes with smaller clusters and smaller berries. The wines tend to have concentrated fruit flavors, but given the differences in climate and farming methods, there's still a lot of variety in wine styles."

Those interested in visiting the region, which spans both Lane and Benton County, will find it low in pretension and high on hospitality. "I like to say we're still in boots and not suits," says Pfeiffer, who describes many of the wineries as having "rustic elegance." "Chances are when you come to the winery, you're going to meet the owners and the winemakers. Many are first-generation owners. We're very close together, so you don't have to drive very long distances to get to the other wineries, and we don't have traffic." The bucolic scenery makes for a beautiful drive.

Danuta and Robin Pfeiffer of Pfeiffer Winery.

People can set a wine region apart, too, and Hagen believes that's the case in the Lower Long Tom. "There's an abundance of growers, owners and winemakers who were born and raised on the multi-generational farms where they are now making or growing wines. I think that's really powerful and informs people's sensibility about how they treat their land and how they feel—the voice of their place shapes their work."

Family is what brought Hagen back to the Lower Long Tom region. He was born and raised in the area but left to pursue a career in Southern California for many years. When it was time for him to start a family, he came back. "This place is in my bones. There's something about this area, its people and the land that have always given me a sense of purpose and self-identity."

The family feeling at these wineries extends from the growers to their patrons. Robin Pfeiffer was a teacher in Eugene for 30 years before transforming his family's sheep farm into a vineyard. He has a number of ex-students who bring their kids to the winery to taste. "It's such a kick to see them again, and to sit down and have a glass of wine," he says.

Boehm may not have roots going back generations in the area, but he's grateful to have ended up in this adopted home with this extended AVA family. "For me to get the opportunity in this country to find a piece of land and start growing grapes and eventually making wine, it's a dream come true," he says.

With the Lower Long Tom now gaining attention from professionals around the world, his dream of getting this region the recognition it deserves is well on its way to coming true. ■

Rooted in Ancient Soil

MOUNT PISGAH, POLK COUNTY, OREGON BECOMES THE STATE'S 23RD AVA

BY MICHELE FRANCISCO

Pardon me as I riff on the accurate comment spoken by Dorothy to her little dog in the movie Wizard of Oz, "Toto, I've a feeling we're not in Missouri anymore."

Oregon greeted a new wine appellation, recently approved by the Alcohol and Tobacco Tax and Trade Bureau, commonly known as the TTB. Named for a small mountain southwest of Salem, Mount Pisgah, Polk County, Oregon is a rather lengthy name for an AVA. While researching, I discovered the United States is liberally punctuated with Mt. Pisgahs, including three in Oregon, one just a couple hours' drive away in Lane County. The original petition listed simply 'Mount Pisgah.' However, hoping to avoid possible consumer confusion with other mountains and counties, the TTB proposed a longer, more descriptive title.

Named by Missourian Colonel Cornelius Gilliam as a tribute to a mountain sharing the same name near his childhood home, Mount Pisgah, Polk County, Oregon is our state's newest, and third smallest AVA. Wholly within the larger Willamette Valley appellation, the TTB agreed with the proposal petitioners that the 5,850-acre mountain has unique features distinguishing it from the surrounding area.

> "The AVA is situated in the foothills of the Coast Range... in an 'eddy' within a river of coastal winds."
> —Matt Driscoll, WildAire co-founder

Brad Ford, owner of Illahe Vineyards, explains, "Many names of local features were discussed, but the mountain was the best unifying geographic feature to describe the grape-growing area." Thus, the mountain itself defines the appellation boundaries, with elevations between 260-835 feet. Because it rises above the valley floor, the vineyards planted within its borders are better protected from spring and fall frost.

The soil is marine sediment above ancient Siletz rock. Open Claim Vineyards comprises one of just nine vineyards within the new AVA. Owner Brett Wall explains, "Among the distinctions is the geological feature of the Siletz River volcanics parent material which provides a special character to the wines produced from the fruit grown in this area." In fact, the new AVA claims the oldest soils in the Willamette Valley.

Because of its southern location, Mt. Pisgah isn't directly affected by the cool ocean air funneling through the Van Duzer Corridor wind gap. The taller Coast Range Mountains to the west also protect from strong winds. "The AVA is situated in the foothills

"The most important feature in both grape growing areas is wind. The first leans into it with a notable surplus. The latter, tucked in around the corner, is perfectly distanced from the perpetually breezy Corridor, while also buffered from the winds over the Luckiamute Valley by Fishback Hill to the south."

of the Coast Range... in an 'eddy' within a river of coastal winds," says WildAire co-founder and winemaker Matt Driscoll, who has worked with fruit from the region since 2008. With an average wind speed of mere 2.3 mph, neighboring Salem is far windier, with its average speed over 6 mph. Strong winds can damage growing grapevines, as happens in both the Van Duzer and Eola-Amity AVAs.

"After making wine from six vineyards in the Van Duzer Corridor appellation along with four on Mt. Pisgah, I better understand what sets them apart from the larger landscape," explains Bryan Croft, winemaker for Rainstorm Winery. "The most important feature in both grape growing areas is wind. The first leans into it with a notable surplus. The latter, tucked in around the corner, is perfectly distanced from the perpetually breezy Corridor, while also buffered from the winds over the Luckiamute Valley by Fishback Hill to the south."

Temperature remains another differentiating factor after soil and wind speed. With a total of 2,543 average growing degree days between 2014-16, Mt. Pisgah is significantly cooler than Salem, with an average of 2,903 days during the same timeframe. These averages can be considered high since all three growing seasons were warmer than usual.

Ford, along with Croft and Freedom Hill Vineyard's Dan and Helen Dusschee, originally discussed developing an AVA in 2014. A larger cohort met in 2016, the final petition was perfected in October 2017.

When asked how the Mt. Pisgah terroir is reflected in the finished wines, Scenic Valley Farms winemaker Gabriel Jagle explains, "I have worked with Pinot Noir from Ash Creek and Illahe Vineyards, and they are distinctly different from others in the Willamette Valley. The lower temperatures and higher elevation allow for lower sugar levels and higher acidity, resulting in wines that are fresh and vibrant– even in the warmest vintages."

Ancient soils also influence the grapevines and subsequent fruit. Jagle continues, "The unique Siletz River Volcanic soils contribute a dark earthiness to the Pinot Noir that cannot be found anywhere else within the valley." Ford adds, "These clay soils, the reduced Van Duzer winds and the warmth of the hills tend to create darker, more tannic skins. After working with four vineyards and tasting nearly all the wine from the new AVA, I can say with confidence that we're growing excellent wine grapes on the mountain." Ford's 80-acre Illahe Vineyard property runs down the south side of Mt. Pisgah, and he is extremely familiar with the area's distinctive wine characteristics.

I believe Don Lange, founder of Lange Estate Winery & Vineyards, sums it up best. "Our family winery has been creating wines from Freedom Hill Vineyards, located within the Mt. Pisgah sub-appellation, since the late 1980s. After a few years of discovery, we were convinced that the unique characteristics of the Freedom Hill wines were profound and sufficiently commanding to merit single-vineyard designation on our labels, a position that has endured to this day. They are among the most distinctive wines made in Oregon and, by turns, some of the most distinctive wines in the world, year after year." ■

TOP STORY: NOV. 2022

In 2019, the nonprofit, Women in Wine: Fermenting Change, was founded. This organization is dedicated to advancing women in the Oregon wine industry. Even with two years of virtual-only content and conferences, the membership and mentorship program have both grown steadily. Learn more at: www.womeninwineoregon.com.

The Rogue Valley has its own Women in Wine, or WiW, group, which hosts quarterly events and happy hours at various wine venues. Between social events, members demonstrate leadership as role models, along with increasing the visibility of Southern Oregon through women winemakers. Each also excels at working closely with others in the vineyards, wineries and over bottles of finely crafted wine. There is a strong bond among these vintners. All mentioned their concern for one another, sustainability in agricultural practices, collaboration, care for respectful treatment of farm/vineyard workers, and commitment to working toward the greater good.

Oregon remains notable for its pioneering lifestyle. Some are groundbreakers in Southern Oregon's wine country, others newer to the area, including several from California. They are: advancing new and innovative varietals; farming methods; lower water use; climatic shifts; wildfire protection; along with inclusivity and diversity practices novel to the previously standardized and male-dominated industry. Today, many vineyards are old enough to employ second, third, and even fourth-generations of women.

It's time we celebrate the highlights of ten amazing characters complete with dirt under their unpainted fingernails, Southern Oregon women of wine.

ASHLEY BRADFIELD

Owner, vigneron, operations manager for WiW, aspiring winemaker

"Let the vines speak for themselves, telling their story…"

No doubt this story might not have been written without Ashley Bradfield. Her enthusiasm miraculously gathered everyone together– during harvest– for a photo shoot. She has served on the board for Women in Wine, co-chairs the community engagement committee and acts as a volunteer advocate. "Allowing her to have a strong voice for Southern Oregon, one that joined and continues to strengthen a community." She celebrates her second anniversary in January.

Bradfield grew up in Washington, D.C. and Alexandria, Virginia. Her first job in a winery was, "Where people made their own wine. It was in a box and we labeled it." She received her degree in Arts in Education for Healing and Social Change in New York City and worked at tough Rikers Island, one of the world's largest correctional and mental institutions, teaching arts and education to the incarcerated. Eventually, Bradfield began her journey to the Applegate Valley through 49 states, and today lives in the woods, drives a tractor and remarks, "I am now a far cry from a city girl." She's currently in the middle of her fourth harvest.

Bradfield manages Red Lily Vineyards' original Tempranillo plantings, where she works alongside Amy Jay and J.C. Regh. Still a couple of years from their first wine release, Bradfield shares, "You show up each day, not just for yourself, but for all the women doing this. Collectively, we are lifting each other's voices because it's such a beautiful story and, to me is the future of this industry."

RACHAEL MARTIN

Founder, owner, winemaker
Red Lily Vineyards

"Southern Oregon is the candy store of grape varietals."

Rachael Martin planted her first vineyard in 2001, and made wine with the fruit in 2003. "Not many people grew Tempranillo," she says, "it was a bit of a niche. I was really in love with big Spanish wines." Not surprisingly, Martin still is. Red Lily has established a reputation on Spanish varietals.

Raised in the Rogue Valley, she left home, studying and working in criminal law for several years. She still "feels like the hometown girl." In 2002, Martin had the opportunity to apprentice under the late Sarah Powell, a legendary winemaker in Southern Oregon, and "it all just fit," she says.

Red Lily's current property and vineyards, with the Applegate River meandering through it, were planted in 2006. "When I first started, it was sort of a boys club. I didn't grow up putting things together or with a family agriculture background. I've learned everything with boots on the ground." For the record, her high rubber boots are a lovely shade of red.

Along with several clones of Tempranillo, Martin grows Verdejo, Grenache, Graciano, Tinta Cão, and buys Touriga Nacional grapes "down the road" at Pavo Real Vineyards. Martin says she, "loves seeing young people come in with a fresh perspective. There's a real vibrancy in the next generation, and our area is on the verge of being well-recognized as a destination wine region. I think the future is so bright here!"

VIRGINIA OAXACA

Owner, viticulturist

ELISA ANTHONY

Viticulturist
Pavo Real Vineyard

"Love meeting all the wonderful people."

Virginia Oaxaca was retired, spending her days strolling Hermosa Beach. Her nephew, a wine grower in Montana, observed she was bored and "just wasting away." Oaxaca agreed and said, "Find something for me, but it's got to be easy." A month later, they met in Jacksonville in search of vineyard property. She bought a plot in late 2012, moving from California in early 2013.

She renamed her vineyard Pavo Real (Royal Turkey in Spanish) for its frequent fowl visitors and has five acres of Riesling and Touriga Nacional. Oaxaca confesses it wasn't easy. "No," she says shaking her head, "it was hell-breaking, walking up and down those rows." She attended classes at U.C. Davis and sold locally to Valley View Winery and Schmidt Family Vineyards. Eventually, she shared some Touriga Nacional vines with Schmidt so they could grow their own. She now sells all her fruit to Martin at Red Lily.

At 81 years old, Oaxaca will transfer her Hispanic, woman-owned vineyard to niece, Elisa Anthony. Anthony comes from a publishing and digital marketing background in Southern California. When she learned her aunt was considering selling, she persuaded her husband, 91-year old father and aunt's brother to move north. "I love it," she says, "Our Riesling even draws Instagram interest from growers of the variety in Germany. We've never turned back."

RENÉ BRONS

Winemaker, sommelier
Schmidt Family Vineyards

"I've painted all my life and find the creativity of winemaking very satisfying."

René Brons is the daughter of Judy and Cal Schmidt, the vineyard's founders. In 2007, when Brons and her family followed them to the Applegate Valley, she didn't even drink wine. With a background in healthcare, Brons began searching for work in a blood lab. Her father had recently built a new lab and said, "I have a lab, and while it's not blood, it is red." After a two-week trial, she became a convert.

Previously a painting teacher, Brons transitioned to the student when she and her eldest son together attended Southern Oregon Wine Institute. In 2018, after 14 years managing the tasting room, she became a full-time winemaker. Brons continues to do all lab work as well as paint. The winery, now in its third generation, promising a "brush-to-bottle lifestyle."

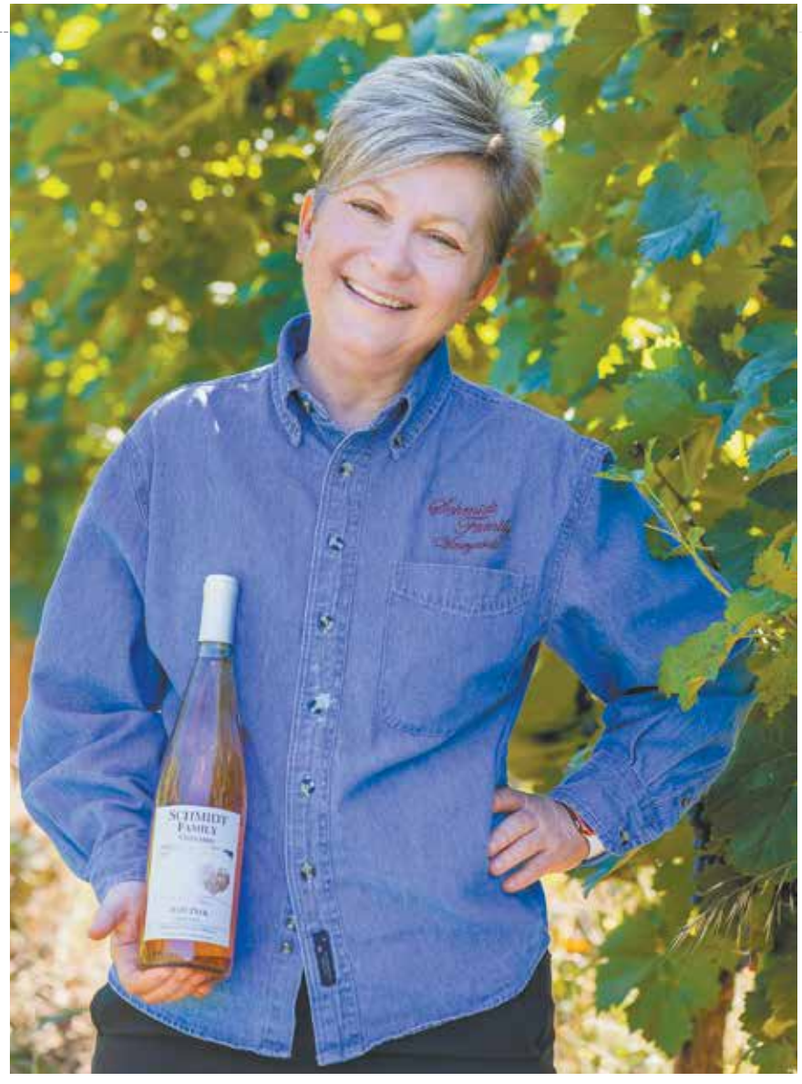

The previous ranch property, purchased in 2000, is 80 acres, with 50 planted to 18 multifarious varietals, including Grüner Veltliner, Albariño, Sauvignon Blanc, Teroldego, Touriga National (from Pavo Real), Barbera, Carménère and Cabernet Sauvignon. It is truly a testimony to the exceptional microclimates throughout the Rogue Valley.

AMY JAY

Vineyard manager, regenerative farmer/consultant, aspiring winemaker

"We are for sure growing grapes in a sweet, sweet spot to be growing grapes."

"It's been quite the adventure," declares Amy Jay. Her decade of experience working in various agriculture systems, including flower, farm, dairy and livestock, led to co-managing with Ashley Bradfield eight grape varietals, focusing on Tempranillo and Bordeaux varietals, planted on five acres. Together, they look forward to their third harvest and releasing their first wine in 2023.

Another Oregon transplant from California by way of Montana, Jay worked at LongSword Vineyard, with the opportunity to learn all aspects of the business, from the tasting room, to field and winery. She says this was, "great because often they're quite segregated but, in fact, are very symbiotic and dependent on each other."

As a new mother to 8-month-old Avery, she observed during the magazine photo shoot, "One of the really cool things about this group is that we have such great representation generationally of what's happening here in the Rogue Valley." Indeed, we had pretty much every generation represented from 8 months to 89 years!

Cellar master at Quady North
Owner, winemaker at Circadian Cellars

"I never want to box myself in."

In 2015, Sara Garr began as a production intern for harvest at Quady North. She smiles, remembering "I started washing buckets and they decided to keep me on after harvest." This allowed her to learn more aspects of winemaking and business practices. Garr adds, "We work with a plethora of different varieties through the custom crush, and that's what really got me hooked– the variety."

Born in California but raised in Southern Oregon, Garr prefers to keep her possibilities open. She made her first wines for Quady in 2016 and started her own brand, Circadian Cellars, the same year. What's behind the name? "I wanted to give a nod to how circular things can be," Garr explains. "Tune into the rhythms of nature and how much winemaking reflects that as well. Dynamic. Disruptive." Not specializing in a particular wine or style "gives me creative license to experiment with different varieties and styles, like Malvasia Bianca or Pét-nat, for example. I want Circadian to be a really fun, constantly revolving, artistically driven, disruptive brand that grows." When you taste her wines, I think you'll find she's headed for success.

TRAUTE MOORE

Founder, owner, viticulturist
Quail Run Vineyards and South Stage Cellars

"I fell in love with the view. That's how we got into grapes– by accident, not by design."

Born in Vienna, Austria, Traute Moore also arrived in Oregon via Southern California. In 1989, the first grapevines were planted at Quail Run Vineyards. Today, the 15-acre vineyard Quail Run has 13 distinct vineyard blocks and grows over 30 grape varietals. Honored in 2010, Traute and her late husband, Don, received the Founder's Award from the Oregon Winegrowers Association for their pioneering work in establishing Southern Oregon's wine industry.

During those early years, they invited many wine specialists to help them and the burgeoning wine community learn how to cultivate wines. Moore was always directly involved in the vineyards. "I was out pruning and working with crews, teaching people how to train plants, learning to trellis along with most of the sales. We did a lot of experimentation and initiated quite a lot of new things."

At the time, people assumed few grapes would grow well here. During the winter, the Moores would travel to Chile, Argentina and other wine regions, discovering new grape varietals to try. They were the first to grow Carménère and Pinotage. She was also pivotal in starting the Jacksonville Wine Association and bus tour.

These days, at 89 years old, Moore is still involved in the business, more often in the tasting room. "With all the varietals we grow, you can discover something new all the time. We offer something different in a place that is very welcoming."

DEBBIE LUETHY

Owner, viticulturist
Belmont Vineyards

"I'm in a place I like to be."

"Around 2006, after first moving here," recalls Debbie Luethy, "we spoke with Traute and Don Moore. From them, we got an understanding of the local wine industry." Belmont Vineyards grapes are now sold to local wineries.

SUPPORT THESE OREGON WINE ALMANAC BUSINESSES

Having come from the Southern California trucking business, Luethy says they were "refugees searching for a career change." Looking at property in the Bear Creek Valley, she says, "I figured I love wine, and a vineyard just stands there and it either grows, or it doesn't. But it's a nice quiet place, peaceful, so we bought the vineyard property first and added our first planting in 2007."

She currently has 12 acres planted with five grape varietals: Malbec and Tempranillo, then Syrah and Petite Syrah in 2008, and recently, some Pinot Noir. Unfortunately, Luethy lost about 90 percent of her fruit this year during the freak hailstorm in July. "Now we're learning new pruning techniques for healing the damaged vines and looking forward to next year."

LINDA DONOVAN

Founder, owner, winemaker
Pallet Wine Co. and City Center Wine District

"I love helping people with their winemaking goals– that's why I started my business."

When Linda Donovan opened the Rogue Valley's first custom crush facility Pallet Wine Company in 2009, she says, "The timing was right, our wine industry was growing and I wanted to offer smaller growers a place to call home. It has been a lot of work– but my team and I love the challenges."

Then, when her business grew rapidly, she bought the adjacent building. It offered the necessary additional storage and winemaking space, along with room for Medford's first downtown wine bar, The Urban Cork. Eventually, Donovan purchased the empty land comprising the remainder of the city block. With it, she has even more storage and another, soon-to-be-opened high-end wine bar in her "City Center Wine District."

Donovan operates custom crush facility Pallet Wine Co., producing wine for a number of local wineries, along with some in Texas, Florida, New York and Virginia. She says her private label program is "helping customers all over the country put their label on wines that we have available. We even have an in-house designer, a label printer and a bottling line which allows us to bottle small lots."

The Urban Cork pours wines made solely by Pallet Wine Co.– over 150 wines, all created for her custom crush clients and her own label (L. Donovan Wines). I'll let you in on a secret… a couple of those wines are made using grapes from Debbie Luethy's Belmont Vineyards.

Women in Wine builds the foundation for today's winemakers and future generations of female winemakers and wine business owners. These pioneering women have challenged tradition and stand tall against patriarchal industry odds, advancing the wine industry. Thank you to each and every one of you for making Rogue Valley, and the wines, a better place.

Cheers to the entwined wines! ■

2022 OWP PERSON OF THE YEAR

Janie Brooks Heuck

Janie Brooks Heuck has been at the helm of Brooks Wine since 2004. She was thrust into the position following the unexpected death of her brother Jimi. Jimi's legacy and philosophy drove the work of Brooks Wine, and the 2004 vintage continues to be at the forefront of the winery's story.

Total production has grown substantially since then. In 2003, his last vintage, Jimi made 2300 cases. Today, the winery makes 20,000 cases annually, with a nationwide wine club and a groundbreaking dedication to community and environmental sustainability. This astounding growth is due to Jimi's sister, Janie Brooks.

Brooks' commitment to relationships and hospitality has made Brooks Wine a company customers love. Coupled with her drive to preserve her brother's legacy, Brooks has a deep dedication to sustainability and giving back that is unmatched in this industry. Her stewardship of Brooks Wine over the last 18 years has grown her family's namesake winery and the reputation of Oregon wine worldwide. Her influence on the Oregon wine industry for nearly two decades makes her our choice for Person of the Year.

Brooks became managing director of Brooks Wine on September 4, 2004, the day her brother died. (The sole owner of the winery is Jimi's son, Pascal.) That night, winemakers from 12 wineries, all Jimi's friends, created a plan and offered their help. Considering their friend's dream and his contracts with vineyard owners, the group wanted to move forward and ensure the vintage of Brooks Wine was produced in his honor. They felt Jimi's legacy should be how he kept his promises to his grape growers. Making his wine was also a way to honor their friend. "I would've done anything at that point," Jay Somers of J.C. Somers Vintner explained. "I didn't even look at it as helping. Of course, it's my job." They needed Brooks' agreement to run the business that year. At the time, nobody expected the winery would continue much beyond that grim harvest.

While the winemakers shepherded the 2004 harvest to fruition, dividing production and ABOVE: Brooks sits in the winery's biodynamically-farmed gardens, surrounded by flowers, fruits, vegetables and herbs, all grown without the use of chemicals, herbicides, pesticides, synthetic fertilizers and fungicides. Not only is the space beautiful but the produce supplies much of the food used in Brooks Wines' hospitality program.

using their own limited space to vinify it, Brooks attended her first viticulture and enology course at U.C. Davis. She was able to rely on distributor relationships her brother had fostered to sell that vintage. She credits the caring group of winemakers as the reason Brooks Wine is still going strong today. "They could've kept the fruit and made their own wine, and if they had given me that advice, I probably would've done it. I am so appreciative of their vision."

Another dedicated to this vision was Chris Williams, Jimi's assistant winemaker. He assumed Jimi's several winemaking positions that year. He had no time to think about the future then.

It wasn't until spring 2005 that Williams suggested they continue building the company. He called Brooks a few months after harvest, offering to be her winemaker. "To me, it just felt right," Williams explained, adding, "It was really all about Janie. She had to want to continue this. I had to see what she thought of the idea."

Brooks reflects on those days as a series of decisions. The first, the night her brother died, was easy: together the winemakers had made a plan for her, and she wanted her brother's wine to be made. In 2005, there was no choice but to continue. She hired Williams and they made Brooks Wines in a custom crush facility. In 2008, Williams and Brooks agreed they needed their own facility if they were going to keep increasing production. Each decision was a choice to grow, and for Brooks to keep running her brother's company. Throughout the years, the two have been a team. "I got along really well with her right away," Williams said about his choice to continue at Brooks Wine. "Janie is less concerned about what should be done, but focused more on what can be done."

They wholeheartedly honor Jimi's philosophies. His passion for biodynamics led Brooks to run their estate biodynamically, and Williams moved to using native fermentations with minimal intervention winemaking. Williams believes his decisions are ones Jimi would have adopted as well. Brooks also followed her brother's goals, by continuing to improve the winery's sustainability and community efforts. "I believe that if we're all here doing this, we should be giving back, and taking care of things. I think it should be at the forefront of what everybody's doing."

Over the years, Brooks has held many volunteer positions, expanding connections and knowledge of her adopted industry. "Being in an industry filled with such amazing people that have accepted me, it's a gift," she says, one she worked hard to earn. She has volunteered with Oregon Pinot Camp, and Brooks Wine is involved annually with IPNC. She sits on the Willamette Valley Wineries Association Barrel Auction Committee, sat on the board of the International Riesling Foundation, and represented Oregon on the Board of Directors for WineAmerica for six years, two as the organization's chair. "All these positions have helped me meet everyone in the industry, allowing for a more comprehensive understanding of operations at both the state and national levels."

After the 2019 vintage, Williams and Brooks decided to slow the winery's annual production volume. "We purposefully chose to maintain our existing case count; now our growth is focused on improving, being the best we can be." For Brooks, this means refining and improving her company's sustainability efforts and giving back to the community. She spearheaded Brooks Wine's efforts to obtain Certified B Corporation status. Demeter-certified since 2013 (practicing since 2002), Brooks Wine is also a member of 1% for the Planet and partners with Ecologi for reforestation projects. In addition to the purchasing offsets with Ecologi, the winery plants a tree for every $50 spent on wine.

Recently, Brooks included the website in her sustainability quest, creating the world's first winery website built with digital sustainability in mind. She learned that if the internet were a country, it would be the sixth-largest consumer of energy. This realization led her to work with 5forests, utilizing their Earth First Ecommerce protocol to design a website that uses minimal resources. The website currently is hosted by a company powered by renewable energy. These interests created a business that Brooks feels proud to lead and winery customers are happy to support.

Williams and Brooks independently stressed how each is most grateful to their employees. "I'm really proud of the length of service of our team here," Brooks explained. Williams has worked for Brooks Wine since the beginning, and multiple team members have been there for a decade. "I must be doing something right to have this level of support." Becoming certified as a B Corp allowed her to concentrate on how the winery could still improve as an employer. "We added benefits I never would've thought of," she said, based on the certification's suggestions. Brooks Wine's ethos means taking care of people and planet.

In 2014, while deciding to build a new winery and tasting room, Brooks envisioned many goals for the space. "I wanted our tasting room to be a community gathering place. It's about providing our guests an experience that makes them want to return." To foster community connection, Brooks Wine offers classes, dinners and events that don't always focus solely on wine, such as cooking and gardening classes. "Somebody might like wine but really like gardening," Brooks explains. She wants everyone to have a reason to visit.

Brooks feels honored by guests coming to the tasting room. The team strives to ensure guests will enjoy a memorable experience, and hopefully return frequently. "If my team and I can just give a little glimmer of goodness to every person we touch through this business, then that's what I want to do."

This desire partially explains why Brooks started writing Sunday emails during the pandemic. She felt the company needed to connect more deeply with their community. "A personal touch, a human element, should play a part in everything we do," she explains. Her emails are famously heartfelt and candid, often including memories of Jimi or stories about her week, and signed with her personal email and cell phone number. She receives random calls for reservations (which she arranges), along with personal notes and suggestions. "People feel like they can tell me things. They know where my heart is and aren't afraid to talk to me, even if it may not be positive, and give me an opportunity to fix it." Brooks bases the company's outlook and interactions on human connection instead of sales pitches. For many, their knowledge of Brooks Wine is solely through those emails.

COVID-19 inflicted numerous challenges to businesses. The summer of 2020, as tasting rooms began to reopen, Brooks Wine constructed a new station with full service, adjacent to their biodynamic garden, to provide a safe customer experience. That outdoor space, now permanent, adds to their capacity during the busy season. "We doubled our seating while being super strict about COVID. In 2021, we invested in an air purification system for all of our indoor spaces to protect our team and our guests. People feel very safe coming here."

Continuing to build community under the constraints of COVID-19 presented a challenge Brooks Wine met head on, but in the fall of 2020 when the many wildfires ignited around the state, they dealt a devastating blow with their destructive smoke. Brooks decided against making wine that year, because she didn't want to ask her production team to create amazing wine from fruit impacted by smoke. "I made the decision fairly early, so growers could find other homes for their fruit. I told them that if they did or even if they couldn't, I would be there to support them." At the time, although Brooks Wine had crop insurance, she didn't realize how many growers did not. Supporting the farmers is a tenet of Brooks Wine, and Brooks especially treasures the relationships with growers passed down to her by Jimi.

Finding a way to pay her farmers required some creativity. The solution? Brooks established a fund to pay their growers by taking proceeds from sales of the single vineyard wines created with their fruit. "If you love Crannell's Pinot Noir, you could buy a case of Crannell and know you were directly helping Dick [Crannell]." It offered consumers a unique glimpse into the industry and worked well: Within six months Brooks Wine met all their obligations to growers.

With the decision not to produce wine in 2020, one commitment could not be fulfilled: the hired intern team no longer had jobs. But Brooks offered them positions for the following harvest. They all accepted, instead working the 2021 harvest. "Luckily, we didn't lose those relationships either," Brooks said.

Brooks Wine celebrates its 25th anniversary this year along with the 50th of their estate vineyard. Brooks will be hosting events, both at the winery and in Portland, as well as a few celebrations on the road, to appreciate wine club members in other parts of the country. Just as she is humbled by guests choosing to visit the tasting room, her gratitude for their long-term patrons remains clear. She is excited to bring the party to them. "We have benefited from their support over the last 25 years, and I want to be able to say thank you." ■
