LITTLE BY LITTLE CAN DELIVER GREATER REWARDS

BY MICHELE FRANCISCO, OWP EDITOR

For many, the new year inspires resolutions to improve and become better people. In theory, these aspirations feel manageable. In practice, however, most fail to achieve much progress toward them.

Finally recognizing I, too, was a victim of the "resolution treadmill," I changed tactics and have realized greater success (and happiness) pursuing dreams instead of tangible goals. I've found better results with incremental changes over time. A mere five percent improvement is an easier commitment. Much like saving money, annual compounding grows larger rewards each year.

I strongly believe investing in one's self and core beliefs is the secret to improving our world. Chasing passions can indeed open doors to new opportunities. In fact, the media publishes similar "feel good" stories every day. Here's mine.

In 2011, I enrolled in Chemeketa's Northwest Wine Studies program simply because I adored Oregon wine. I wanted to learn everything about how to grow, make and market it. As my passion grew, I began blogging about Northwest wines. Writing regularly helped me refine my craft, preparing me for the role of Oregon Wine Press editor. Today, I feel incredibly fortunate (and privileged) to promote the aspirations of so many people highlighted in each issue.

Ironic how a passion project can lead to something bigger…

For 2025, my professional goals remain: to continue publishing informative, compelling stories; showcase wineries around the state, thereby embracing our publication name "Oregon" Wine Press; and include more individuals and projects celebrating diversity, innovation and sustainability. With the established principle of compounding, I expect even greater gains than ever.

Personally, I am working to become a more accepting, global citizen. We can learn so much from other cultures and customs. I'm seeking new ways to see the world. Knowledge brings fresh ideas; watch them appear in future stories.

I hope the New Year brings good tidings and prosperity to you as well. ■

Where French Tradition Meets Oregon Authenticity.

At Lytle-Barnett, we believe good sparkling wine comes from a fortuitous blend of natural forces and human intervention. But we've found that the very best of the best emerge in places where exceptional quality meets passion, experience, and great timing. Our vintage sparkling wines are sourced from the Willamette Valley. Every bottle of Lytle-Barnett is a confluence of our collective experience, our passion for Oregon's unique winemaking culture, and our respect for centuries of French champagne tradition.

Discover the exceptional sparkling wines of Lytle-Barnett at our newly opened tasting room in the heart of downtown Dundee.

CELEBRATING A COLLEAGUE LOST LAST YEAR

Terrence David Casteel

WINEMAKER, PSYCHOLOGIST, THEOLOGIAN

Terrence Casteel

Terry Casteel, co-founder of Bethel Heights Vineyard, and a lifetime leader in the Oregon wine industry, passed away on November 30, 2023, at the age of 81, after many years of valiant struggle with Parkinson's Disease. He is survived by his wife, Marilyn Webb, his twin brother Ted Casteel, his sons Ben Casteel and Jon Casteel, and five grandchildren.

Terry was born August 12, 1942, in Portland to Blaine Casteel and Erma Wiggin Casteel. He graduated from Clover Park High School in Tacoma in 1960, then went on to graduate cum laude from Whitworth College in 1964. In 1967, he received a Bachelor of Divinity degree from Princeton Theological Seminary, and in 1975, a Ph.D. in Educational Psychology from the University of Washington and began a psychology practice in Seattle.

In 1976, when Terry married Marilyn Webb, they began making wine in their basement as a hobby. As Terry immersed himself in the study of the science and art of growing grapes and winemaking, gradually this hobby became his true life's passion. (It was not until many years later that Terry revealed that what he really always wanted to be was a song and dance man.)

In a leap of faith in 1977, Terry and Marilyn came to the Willamette Valley together with Terry's twin brother Ted and Ted's wife Pat and established Bethel Heights Vineyard, one of the earliest vineyards in the Eola Hills. In 1984, they established their estate winery. As winemaker at Bethel Heights Terry became an integral member of the famously collaborative Oregon wine community. He served on the founding Board of the International Pinot Noir Celebration, and in keeping with his commitment to social justice, Terry also provided many years of leadership and guidance for the Service Program of ¡Salud!, a non-profit organization supported by the Oregon wine industry, whose mission is to provide accessible and affordable healthcare services for vineyard stewards and their families.

In 2005, the impacts of Parkinson's Disease forced Terry's retirement as winemaker at Bethel Heights and the baton was passed to his son Ben. Terry and Marilyn then went on to help build a network of support for parents and families at the Parkinson's Center at OHSU.

Terry was an active member of the First Presbyterian Church of Salem for all the years he lived here.

Donations in memory of Terry can be made to support Parkinson's research at OHSU (donate.ohsufoundation.org/terry-casteel). ■

Gran Moraine wines shine a light on the monologue of the Gran Moraine Vineyard, lifting its voice and vibrant energy through a signature style of elegance and restraint, with a fresh through-line of acidity. Not a Baaaad Job

SHEEP IN THE VINEYARDS

BY GAIL OBERST

On sunny days about a month before budbreak, more than 100 sheep roam Björnson Vineyard's grapevine rows in the hills above West Salem. The animals move slowly, devouring the ground cover, occasionally pausing to chew their cud. These are welcome guests, according to winery owner Mark Björnson. Two neighboring wineries– Bryn Mawr Vineyards and Bethel Heights Vineyard– hosted the flock before they hoofed it over to Björnson.

The sheep are not freeloading guests drifting from winery to winery in search of greener pastures. Instead, they're in the vineyard to do a job. That is, if you can call eating, pooping and peeing "jobs." Behind this pastoral scene in the Eola-Amity Hills AVA lies serious business of mowing, soil building and fertilization, all conducted by animals who make the task look easy.

For sheep, whose regular gig is producing wool, lambs and meat for their owner Jared Lloyd of Naked Grazing, this side gig is a cinch. At worst, the flock must take a hike or hitch a ride to the next vineyard. But at the end of the short journey are lush greens and grateful hosts.

It works out pretty well for the wineries as well as the sheep and their shepherds. The three wineries pay Naked Grazing to supply the flock and move it between the three wineries.

Lloyd said requests for his sheep have taken off this year. He had previously worked for another company providing sheep to vineyards, but when demand increased, he launched his own business. "My flocks will eat their way through a dozen vineyards and 2,000 acres this year," he said.

The Horned Dorset sheep make up the bulk of his flocks. "It's an older heritage breed with a hardy, maternal disposition, a good meat and milk provider that produces a coarse down wool great for weaving," Lloyd said.

Grazing sheep in vineyards, an ancient practice, is finally catching on with both vineyard owners and wine drinkers who appreciate vintners' attention to the environment, as well as the quality of their wines.

Björnson, who established the winery with wife, Pattie, in 2007, said he has long wanted to bring sheep into the picture. However, until he retired from his day job as a health insurance executive, hadn't had the time to arrange it.

DIGESTING THE SCIENCE

Plenty of research, including some from Oregon State University, supports the practice of grazing ground cover in the vineyard. Studies show soil diversity created by grazing increases the quality of wine by improving a plant's ability to use nutrients. Grazing increases phenols and pigments– the stuff of delicious wine. Other regenerative practices also accompany grazing. Björnson has never tilled the vineyard, and doesn't irrigate, saying he aims to farm sustainably.

Usually, wineries use cover crops, mowing and fertilization to achieve these results, but tractors in the wet Northwest winter vineyards can compact soil. "The combination of sheep and cover crops make it possible to build the soil while reducing erosion," Björnson said. There are additional benefits: studies prove grazing can also reduce invasive species and while increasing the water-holding capacity of soil, making it more resistant to drought.

But Alexis Bame, self-proclaimed "wine fairy" of the Björnson tasting room, ranks lambs at the top of her list of benefits. Many of the ewes transported from Bethel Heights Vineyard were pregnant and, most likely, will deliver during their stay there.

"We're going to have babies," she said excitedly.

Kate Crow, sales manager at Bethel Heights, is also a sheep cheerleader: "The sheep did an excellent job of 'mowing' our vineyard. They were fun to watch move around from area to area. Customers were intrigued with them and we relished the opportunity to educate folks on our regenerative farming practices."

"Our fluffy friends played a pivotal role in maintaining our vineyard's health, captivating the hearts of our staff and visitors, and creating a unique tasting experience," said Krista Lauer, vice president of hospitality at Bryn Mawr Vineyards.

SHEEP SHARE IS BORN

The flock is not a permanent fixture at the three wineries. This year, the first for the three who call their project a "Sheep Share," the flocks stayed for a few weeks in January at Bryn Mawr, before ambling to the adjacent Bethel Heights. The longest distance to Björnson from Bethel Heights– slightly more than three miles– was considered too much for the pregnant "madams," so they were given a ride in the Naked Vineyard trailer.

"The name 'Sheep Share' is a play on a traditional wine club share, as the program benefits visitors and members of all three wineries," Lauer said. While the sheep were onsite, club members received complimentary tastings and discounts on bottle purchases. "It was a wonderful avenue to increase traffic and visibility as well as educate our members about the benefits of sheep grazing," said Lauer.

While the Sheep Share wineries have bid adieu to their flocks until next year, some Oregon wineries own and manage permanent flocks of sheep, goats and other grazers year-round. ■

Revino Revs Up

CONSUMERS CAN NOW PURCHASE OREGON WINE IN REFILLABLE BOTTLES

BY GREG NORTON

After spending years envisioning a reusable wine bottle system, Revino's refillable bottles of Oregon wine arrive on retail shelves this summer.

Revino created the nation's only wine bottle specifically designed for reuse, an unprecedented, industry standard-setting product. After enjoying a wine, the empty Revino bottle is returned, cycled through a washing process, refilled and re-sold.

By spring, 16 Oregon wineries had completed bottling runs, with an anticipated 60,000 cases of Revino glass filled by the end of this season. Reusable up to 50 times, these 720,000 bottles avoid almost two million pounds of CO_2 emissions and divert 320 tons of material from landfills after just three fills, according to Keenan O'Hern and Adam Rack, Revino's co-founders.

The unique design makes it easy to identify a Revino bottle. Look for an elegant curve impressed into the bottle's neck, the word "refillable" embossed along the bottom and, within the punt, a small outline of Oregon state.

PARTNERS LARGE AND SMALL

Participating Oregon wineries range from boutique to among the state's largest producers.

Newberg's Et Fille Wines became one of the first to fill Revino bottles. "We were already using locally sourced eco-weight glass so implementation was quite simple," said co-founder Jessica Mozeico. She praises the Willamette Valley Wineries Association with spreading the word among vintners and assisting in the planning process. Et Fille used Revino's standardized Burgundy-style bottles for all its spring releases. "There were no logistical hurdles to bottling," Mozeico reported.

Jess Pierce, general manager at Walter Scott Wines, noted their winery bottled three wines in Revino glass: La Combe Verte Pinot Noir and Chardonnay, and Cuvée Ruth Pinot Noir. Pierce also used them for her Riesling-only label, Pierce Wines. She first encountered refillable glass bottles in Germany's Mosel region, where she regularly exchanged empty mineral water bottles when buying full ones. Stateside interest grew by bottling wine in refillable beer bottles at Portland's Coopers Hall, where Rack was employed. Pierce feels Revino aligns perfectly with Pierce Wine's tiny production and local distribution. "Having Oregon-produced glass and packaging is a big deal for me."

Willamette Valley Vineyards filled over 1,400 cases of the reusable bottles with 2023 Whole Cluster Pinot Noir. In a press release, founder and CEO Jim Bernau placed the effort alongside the winery's longstanding sustainability pledge, including "the use of wind and solar power, natural cork stoppers and other low-impact and certified LIVE methods." This wine is destined for Willamette's many tasting rooms in Oregon and Southwest Washington, joining Revino's developing network of collection points where consumers may drop off their empty bottles.

TOP: A person handling a Revino wine bottle as it exits the Willamette Valley Vineyards bottling line. BELOW: An empty, unlabeled, refillable Revino wine bottle.

Willamette's existing delivery trucks will begin collecting returned Revino bottles, with a mass consolidation at the estate winery in Turner.

EMBRACING ALTERNATIVES

Packaging, the primary energy needed to produce and ship empty glass to bottling locations, remains one of the largest contributors to a winery's carbon footprint. This requires more energy than transporting the finished product to distributors and retailers. The industry is responding by adopting lighter-weight bottles and alternative packaging– cans, tetra paks and "bag-in-a-box." Revino's method allows for the preeminence of glass while restoring refillable beverage containers previously used in the U.S. and still common overseas.

LOOKING AHEAD

As Oregon wine lovers buy their favorites in Revino bottles this year, the collection network continues expanding, along with a washing facility. Revino is discussing label removal improvements both with wineries and print companies.

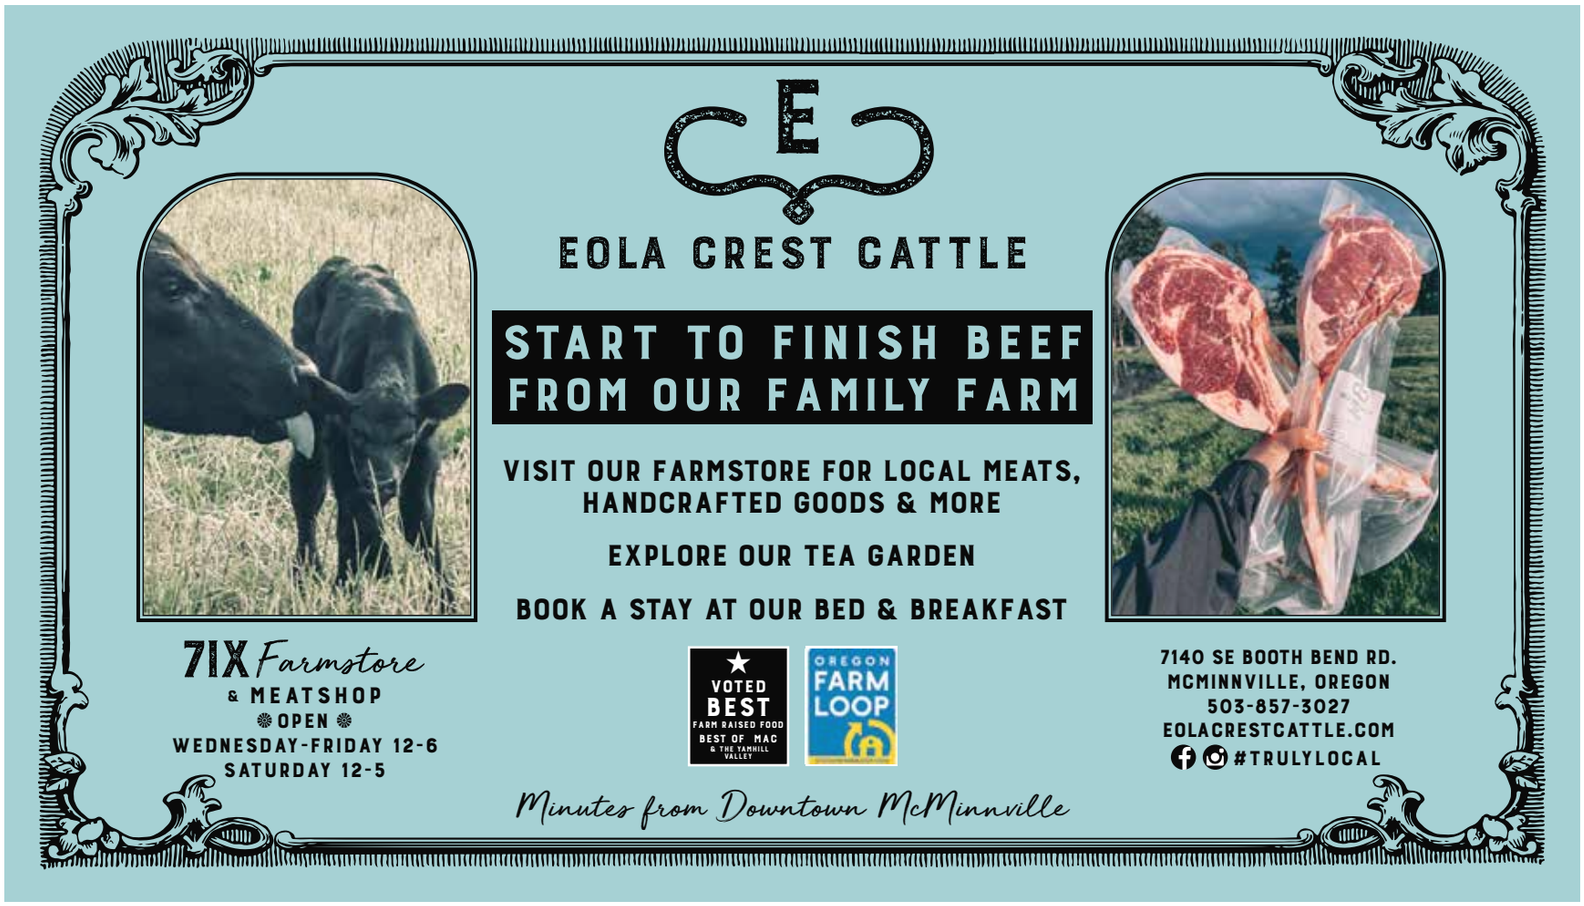

After years of collaborative planning, the system's refillable success lies now in wine lovers' hands. It is too soon to know how many bottles will be returned to complete the circular ecosystem.

Revino is now seeking industry opinion in developing a standardized Bordeaux-style bottle. Its shape, weight and size must be compatible with bottling-line machinery yet durable enough to withstand washing and reuse. This shape will be useful as Revino's system expands into California and Washington. Bottles with screw-top closures are also planned.

A SUSTAINABLE AND THRIVING FUTURE

After years of collaborative planning, the system's refillable success lies now in wine lovers' hands. It is too soon to know how many bottles will be returned to complete the circular ecosystem. The company continues to raise awareness by supplying informational resources for winery websites and tasting rooms. "Revino goes beyond a mere business venture," says O'Hern. "This is a shared journey toward a thriving, more sustainable future."

Mozeico notes, "We're now focused on educating our consumers to return their empty Revino bottles to us so they can go back into the refillable ecosystem." ■

Mission: Inclusion

SOCIAL JUSTICE IN THE WINE WORLD

PHOTO PROVIDED

BY ANNELISE KELLY

Diversity and inclusion conversations happen everywhere today. The wine industry is no exception. Winemaking culture is relatively homogeneous and may not feel accessible or hospitable to aspiring Black, Indigenous, People of Color, or BIPOC, individuals eager to participate in the crafting or purveying of the beloved beverage. However, a few successful people of color in the wine industry are promoting change by offering institutional support to these newcomers. Such organizations are united in their collective mission to improve access and support for BIPOC individuals in the wine community.

At the national level, The Roots Fund assists BIPOC people throughout the United States pursue careers in the wine industry. It offers financial support, mentorship, education and job placement. Here in Oregon, we have two Willamette Valley-based organizations. Asociación Hispana de la Industria del Vino en Oregon y Comunidad, commonly known as AHIVOY, provides education to the Latinx and Hispanic communities, helping members advance in the wine industry. Our Legacy Harvested operates an internship program for BIPOC individuals to establish wine careers in Oregon.

We spoke to leaders of each organization to learn more about making the wine industry more inclusive, enriching it with the unique talents and dedication of a diverse community of future leaders.

THE ROOTS FUND

The Roots Fund was founded in 2020 with a mission "to empower BIPOC in the wine industry by providing resources and financial support, through educational scholarships, wine education, mentorship, and job placement," according to its website.

Co-founder and CEO Ikimi Dubose-Woodson says the program has assisted more than 220 participants and granted over $2.2 million in scholarships. "We help U.S. residents around the entire country, and through our enrichment trip program, they travel throughout the world studying wine with us."

Dubose-Woodson, with fellow co-founders Carlton McCoy, Jr., and sommelier Tahiirah Habibi, "just wanted to see more people in the room that looked like us." All three had experience working in restaurants as chefs, sommeliers and/or front of the house, and became increasingly involved in wine. They recognized how networking, mentorship and supportive bosses were crucial to their success. "We knew many people of color were trying to work in the wine space and needed support, so we built the organization around this idea."

The Roots Fund's first participant, Daren Clark, represents a glowing success story. As a chef displaced by the initial wave of the COVID pandemic, "he came to us and wanted to get into working in production, working in vineyards. He was kind of our test case for many things: our first relationships with France, building our internship program, our relationships with colleges. We put Daren through the enology program at U.C. Davis. He's graduating this summer, so that's absolutely amazing."

After stints overseas in France and New Zealand, he now works for Domaine Drouhin in Dayton. "He's probably our biggest success, very well into his first assistant winemaker position this summer once he graduates, and it just shows you the length and capacity of our work."

Dubose-Woodson emphasizes the organization isn't simply about supplying monetary support. "Now Daren's been able to successfully gain employment, which is the ultimate goal of our organization."

While partners such as Véronique Boss-Drouhin, head winemaker at Domaine Drouhin, have been extremely supportive, Dubose-Woodson acknowledges that potential partners are not always instantly receptive. "Often people think, how much work am I going to have to put in to work with you? And I tell people all the time: our organization is flexible, and I want to meet you where you're at. I don't want to do anything new with you because it won't resonate with you and your team won't want to be a part of it. So, let's figure out– how do we build an organic relationship that's beneficial to both parties?"

"I am excited to see wineries, especially in places like Oregon, who I think don't always get the recognition they deserve for putting out great wines; really thinking outside the box to create spaces for more diverse community in their tasting rooms," says Dubose-Woodson. "The way forward really is having a more inclusive winery industry."

AHIVOY

AHIVOY is a nonprofit creating opportunities for and empowering Latinx and Hispanic vineyard workers. According to its website, the organization provides "education and professional development, paving the way for our hardest-working community members to support their families and establish careers in the wine industry."

The organization was established in 2019 by four prominent Hispanic members of the wine community: the late Jesús Guillén, along with Yuliana Cisneros-Guillén of Guillen Family Wines; Miguel Lopez, owner of Red Dirt Vineyard Management; and Sofía Torres-McKay, co-owner of Cramoisi Vineyard.

According to DeAnna Ornelas, AHIVOY president, "They got together and said 'there's a lot of potential out in the vineyard, and education is really what has gotten us further in life. Let's see if we can use what we've done in our careers to help others, especially those out in the vineyards, the vineyard stewards'." AHIVOY partners with Chemeketa Community College in Salem and Linfield University in McMinnville, offering a free 17-week course encompassing all aspects of the wine industry, including enology, viticulture, winemaking, marketing, sales and wine tasting.

The program takes place one day each week during the slower winter months, between January and the end of April. AHIVOY provides a stipend to compensate for lost wages. Up to 20 vineyard stewards, primarily employed in the cellar or agricultural side of the wine world, benefit from classes, field trips and practical education taught in both English and Spanish.

"We've learned an educated community is a healthy community overall," says Ornelas. "If the people out in the vineyard know more, they're going to help us make better wine. We want to take what those vineyard stewards already know and boost that, build upon that."

> "Folks who finish our program definitely display more confidence and leadership when they go back to their place of business." — AHIVOY president DeAnna Ornelas

"We find plenty of employers discover this program is a real benefit," continues Ornelas. "I think these vineyard stewards, once they know their employer is willing to invest in them, definitely feel more trust. Plus, wineries have a more invested worker. Folks who finish our program definitely display more confidence and leadership when they go back to their place of business."

Success stories include graduate and vineyard manager Alejandro Avalos, who earned a 2023 Oregon Wine Industry Vineyard Excellence Award; {Ivan George may have received an award this year} another graduate who leases his own vineyard and sells grapes; and others who proceed to earn their GED certificates.

OUR LEGACY HARVESTED

Our Legacy Harvested, or OLH, was also founded in 2020 "to educate, advance and empower the BIPOC community in the wine industry." OLH places BIPOC interns at Willamette Valley wineries into four-month paid internships focusing on viticulture, harvest and winemaking. Housing in McMinnville and transportation are included, along with networking, field trips and social opportunities within Oregon's wine country.

"At Our Legacy Harvested, we are starting people in wine specifically in the Willamette Valley because it's where my wine journey began," says founder Tiquette Bramlett. Currently, the vice president of Chosen Family Wines, Bramlett is the former president of Compris Vineyard in Newberg– one of very rare Black women in such positions.

"One thing I've always appreciated is the connection to community here and having the opportunity to get people plugged in." Bramlett observes that "with people of color, when you're looking around in the wine industry,

Uncorking the Truth

NEW BOOK RELIES ON SCIENCE TO DISPEL ALCOHOL MYTHS

BY NEAL D. HULKOWER

Though we're well into the 2020s, there are forces hell-bent on reviving the gravest mistake of the 1920s: Prohibition. This time, instead of "heal[ing] what [was seen] as an ill society beset by alcohol-related problems such as alcoholism, family violence, and saloon-based political corruption" (from Wikipedia), the justification is more personal: the impact of alcohol on one's health.

On January 4, 2023, the World Health Organization, or WHO, self-righteously proclaimed, "No level of alcohol consumption is safe for our health." This questionable public pronouncement disregards the wide range of individual responses to any consumable, let alone alcohol. Neither does it consider the significant differences among the various types of alcoholic beverages. The proclamation instead serves as the basis for the redemonization of one of the world's oldest libations. Governmental entities, accepting WHO's statements as gospel, are twisting themselves into knots trying to accept this perplexing theory while determining how to compensate for lost taxes and evade the wrath of the wine, beer and spirits industries.

For example, state and federal health organizations in the United States are slowly winnowing the recommended number of alcoholic drinks adults should consume daily to as little as zero. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention claims "even moderate drinking may increase your risk of death and other alcohol-related harms, compared to not drinking." The Oregon Health Authority launched a "Rethink the Drink" media campaign featuring a public service ad with blatantly anti-alcohol messaging specifically targeting wine– and red wine at that. The backlash was forceful and immediate; the Oregon Beverage Alliance labeled it "wasteful and offensive."

Into the skirmish enters Tony Edwards and his second book, The Very Good News About Wine: Authoritative health evidence the health authorities don't tell you. Edwards is a former award-winning BBC science documentarian and writer. His work has appeared in popular and medical publications. It should be required reading for anyone in the wine industry who interacts with the public and must address uncomfortable questions regarding the benefits of what they are selling. It provides a knowledgeable rebuttal of biased nonsense increasingly flowing from government agencies through the media under the guise of settled medical science. It should also appear on the reading list for anyone seeking an impartial exploration of the impact of alcohol to make a more informed decision about its use.

Edwards's 2013 book, The Good News About Booze, was his first foray into the fray. He "summarized 50 years of medical evidence amply demonstrating two related but counter-intuitive discoveries: 1. drinking moderate amounts of alcohol is good for one's health, 2. drinking no alcohol at all can be almost as injurious to health as drinking too much." He felt prompted to revisit the subject because of "the attitude to drinking taken by the 'medical authorities.'

Regularly, the quantity of alcohol officially declared safe has been reduced. In almost every other country, the 'alcohol guidelines' are now far lower than in 2013." He establishes the tone with this bold assertion: "If wine were patentable, pharmaceutical companies would surely be producing tankerloads of it to sell to health authorities, as a simple way to reduce the general burden of disease and the consequent pressure on health services."

The encouraging news is elaborated affliction by affliction within the 16 chapters of this surprisingly straightforward, insightful, brief book. Not unexpectedly, cancer is the first disease mentioned and given the most scrutiny. Edwards acknowledges that head and neck cancers are uncontestably caused by alcohol because its toxicity has not yet been neutralized by the digestive system. Of course, smoking while drinking increases this as well as other cancer diagnoses. He includes a discussion of dietary measures that can reduce this risk in moderate drinkers.

The rest of the chapter considers various cancers in parts of the body not flooded by undetoxified doses of alcohol. Here he presents evidence that drinking alcohol in moderation, particularly up to one-third of a bottle of red wine, can make a positive contribution to cancer prevention by reducing the likelihood. In many cases, however, the evidence seems to end in a tie. The positive news Edwards reveals is how cancers of the kidney, thyroid, and blood, along with multiple myeloma, a blood cancer, can be prevented by all types of alcohol.

The chapter on a subject near and dear to my pump, heart disease, summarizes some hopeful findings. An Oxford University study from the 1950s "found that non-drinkers had twice the death rates of men who drank even as much as the equivalent of a bottle of wine a day." Harvard University later confirmed these results with other researchers, concluding "alcohol is good medicine not only for the heart but for the whole cardiovascular system– for example, halving of the risk of heart failure, high blood pressure and ischemic stroke [compared to nondrinkers]."

Other chapters address diabetes, dementia, differences by gender and race, and effects on weight and guts. Regarding the latter, he quotes professor Tim D. Spector of King's College London who reported "there was a significant increase in gut diversity in daily wine drinkers." There is a chapter summarizing other health benefits of drinking on a variety of issues, including sexual function and the common cold. Edwards leaves no kidney stone unturned concluding: "Alcohol in general and wine in particular can provide a wide variety of individual health benefits." The very good news continues with a chapter on the evidence of increased life expectancy compared to nondrinkers.

"What's in Wine?" analyzes all the constituents. It focuses specifically on red wine's salubrious impact. Most important are polyphenols, a collection of semi- and totally unpronounceable compounds, antioxidants present in minute quantities of 0 to 1060 milligrams per liter. Hydroxytyrosol (also found in extra virgin olive oil) is one of the best with a long list of additional health benefits.

Edwards dedicates a chapter to "Even Healthier Wine," that considers eliminating toxic chemicals in its production, especially in the vineyard. He cautions: "Wine grapes are now among the most pesticide-intensive crops in the world." He compares organics and biodynamics, two approaches in eliminating problematic synthetics. After reviewing a number of studies, he declares: "There is no evidence that biodynamic viticulture produces better wines than organic husbandry."

Alcohol-free wine– which Edwards calls fake wine– is discussed, and indeed, found wanting. "Real wine is better for your health than alcohol-free wine, as alcohol and wine's natural ingredients appear to act synergistically."

"Dis- Mis- and Mal- Information" exposes the sources of funding for medical research. It exonerates the alcohol industry of exerting any undue influence on the outcome of studies it funds. In contrast, by distorting and selectively publicizing the findings of research, the anti-alcohol sector has pressured medical authorities to reduce the consumption guidelines so that it is asymptotically approaching zero.

The positive news Edwards reveals is how cancers of the kidney, thyroid, and blood, along with multiple myeloma, a blood cancer, can be prevented by all types of alcohol.

The author routinely questions the results he reports, much as a reader. When questions are begged, he asks and answers them. Many appear in the penultimate chapter, FAQ. Some inquires that occurred to me weren't addressed: What is the relative healthiness of amber, natural, dessert and fortified wines compared to a dry red? Do the skins of white grapes contain the same polyphenols as red ones? How does the sugar in a dessert impact the healthiness of a wine? What about the added alcohol in a port, sherry, and other fortified wines?

Chapter 16, the Afterword, includes a critique of WHO's recommendations. The blind, uncritical, and manifestly ignorant acceptance of them by global governments has become committed to what he calls a de facto Prohibition. Edwards advises: "If governments really must issue advice on drinking habits, they should 'follow the science.'"

Edwards notes, "This book is uniquely led by the medical evidence, not by my personal opinion." Its conclusions rely on 340 studies and references footnoted throughout and listed at the end. Master observer that he is, Edwards has digested highly technical material mass and presents it, with minimum jargon, to nonspecialists. He frequently quotes from the literature, especially when the point runs contrary to the dominant narrative promoted by government agencies. He also emphasizes the importance of increased validity of studies using human subjects.

The principal findings are summarized at the end of each chapter. Particularly helpful are the charts that distill the numerical data to dramatically illustrate the points. For example, one compares the relative risk of death between nondrinkers and drinkers over 50 plotted against daily alcohol consumption. Wine drinkers fare remarkably well.

The current anti-alcohol drumbeat is attracting followers, especially among the younger generations who have been reducing and even counterintuitively foregoing the benefits of wine for dubious canned concoctions. Since neither Edwards nor I are physicians, readers should research and consult with trusted and, hopefully, well-read medical professionals to determine how much alcohol is appropriate. After all, who is WHO to tell you what to do?

There is no danger we will repeat what former Newberg, Oregon, resident Herbert Hoover termed "The Noble Experiment" during the current '20s, or even beyond. Nevertheless, there is a constant need to ensure unfiltered, complete, current, and accurate information regarding alcohol, and specifically, wine. Edwards's concise text is an excellent start. Order the book, study the details of his case, and drink in the very good news, responsibly. ■ you don't necessarily see a lot of us in the space. And so, you're saying, 'okay, what does my community look like? What's going to keep me rooted?'"

Novices to the industry lack access to influential people and businesses. "Often, you don't know where to start nor who to go to. We point people in the right direction," says Bramlett. "If you have a particular passion for something in this area, we want to be able to connect you. We want people to create their own journey in this process. I think it's important for anybody– but especially in the BIPOC community–to know that we can count on each other."

WHAT DOES INCLUSION LOOK LIKE?

Asked about her vision for inclusivity, Bramlett says "It's going to be at its best when organizations like mine and The Roots Fund and AHIVOY will no longer be necessary. I think we're definitely moving in the direction of having the important, larger conversations, which is incredibly impactful. But I think the moment we really arrive is when our programs aren't needed anymore."

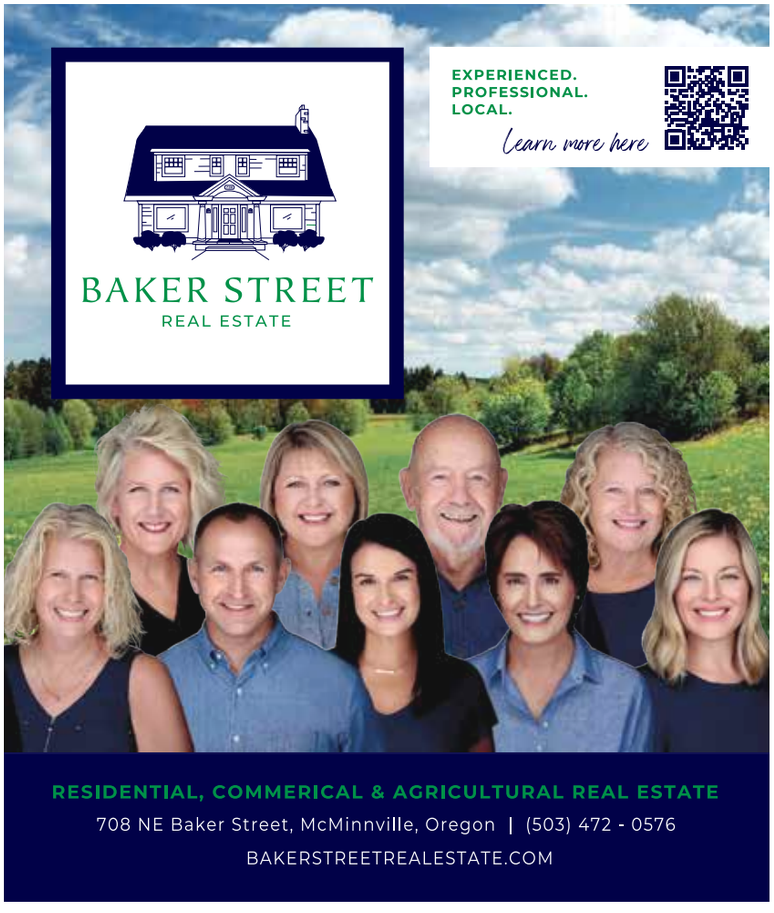

"Seeing people who better represent our country, our community. That's really what inclusivity looks like for us in the wine space," says Dubose-Woodson. "But even in places where you may not find people who look like you, making sure you're walking into an environment where people are receptive of you, entering more welcoming spaces."

"We're adding diversity in the landscape," observes Ornelas. "We're making that connection from vineyard to bottle and into the tasting room. I think folks in the tasting room are having more conversations about who's picking the grapes and where the wine is coming from. We talk about sustainability and the products we use on our vines, and we're looking at it from a social sustainability perspective as well. It's the right thing to do, especially for Black and Brown people who have been at the margins of wine for so long. We are strengthening the Oregon wine industry by empowering vineyard stewards through education."

"As a member of our wine community, I want to leave it better than I found it," says Ornelas. "Our goal at AHIVOY is to make a measurable impact. Hopefully, one day there won't be a need for organizations like ours. Everybody will just be on the same footing. There'll be equality and equity for all, but, until then, we're going to continue to do this." ■

Jackson Family Wines & Keegan Cellars

Eugenia Keegan, who recently completed her 50th harvest season, has been chosen the 2024 Oregon Wine Press Person of the Year.

"Eugenia has been incredibly successful at promoting Oregon, our wines and sustainable farming practices around the world. She has accomplished a great deal during her career and truly embodies the collaborative, generous spirit of Oregon wine in all she does," said Michele Francisco, editor of Oregon Wine Press.

Over coffee one wintry morning, Keegan leans across the table close enough for me to see her brilliant blue eyes as she talks. Her headful of curls, despite silver streaks, lend a youthful air. When I stand, I tower over her; but then, I'm a bit of a giant.

Still, there's nothing small about Keegan. She has been a powerful force in the wine industry, possibly since her birth in Sonoma County. When she speaks of her grandfather, Eugene Slusser, patriarch of the family farm where she spent her early years, her Western bravado glints diamond tough. Jackson Family Wines, for whom she now works, tried to buy her family's fifth-generation farmland when they built La Crema in the early 1980s. The family refused, a story she told Jackson family executives when they visited Oregon to tour new company acquisitions.

"We were your difficult neighbors, I told them," Keegan said. "They cracked up."

The anecdote, not to mention Keegan's vast experience in the wine business, impressed Jackson's officials enough to offer her a job overseeing winery operations in Oregon. That was a dozen years ago. Back then, she'd been involved in nearly 40 winegrape harvests in California, Oregon and Europe. My thought was: Smart Jackson Family Wines' officials. They knew they'd hit pay dirt when they met her.

When Keegan tells me, "My real love is farming," she's not joking. As we talk, it's apparent her love for the agricultural lifestyle– both European and American– inspired her moves. She's traversed acres of vineyards, cellars full of wine, over miles of travel across continents, and motivated years of land and business purchases along with jobs practical and passionate. Each time she landed as an owner or administrator that distanced her from the field, she always found her way back.

We can thank David Adelsheim, one of Oregon's OG winegrowers/vintners, for luring this fifth-generation Californian to settle here. Keegan had been visiting Oregon since the 1980s and 90s at the exclusive and infamous Steamboat and IPNC gatherings, where she and Adelsheim met as colleagues. When their longtime business friendship bloomed into romance, Keegan first commuted to Oregon, then set up business here. She was general manager of The Four Graces and Black Family Estate in Dundee before Jackson Family Wines crowned her queen of their Oregon brands and properties.

ABOVE: Eugenia Keegan standing with long time partner and well-known Oregon wine pioneer David Adelsheim, founder of Adelsheim Vineyard.

Keegan had long been passionate about involvement in community affairs (her early years involved helping to found the Russian River Valley Winegrowers and Premiere Napa Valley), so it was natural for her to fully adopt the her new home state. Her board service pedigree includes several local wine industry organizations as well as advisory council positions at both Linfield University and Chemeketa Community College. She joined Jackson Family Wines in 2013 and has been instrumental in the growth of the company's Oregon brands: Gran Moraine, Penner-Ash Wine Cellars, WillaKenzie Estate and Zena Crown Vineyard. In 2019, she joined the court of the Jackson Family Wines kingdom as a senior vice president of winegrowing, now consulting on 40 brands ranging from California, Oregon, Washington, France and Italy in the northern hemisphere, to South Africa, Australia and Chile south of the equator."

Her work today, helping to sustain the Jackson family's brands, both on the ground and in the public sphere, addresses a future of political and environmental challenges. To tackle climate change, for example, the company is investing in cooler regions– recently in the United Kingdom and Canada's Vancouver Island. Biodynamic farming and other sustainable practices remain integral parts of the company's plan to maintain long-term health in the vineyard, "So that we can keep making great wine for people to drink for a long time to come," she said.

Obviously, this is no short-term project.

"We're hedging our bets for the future," she said. "We've been asked to make investments for Chris Jackson's (in his early 30s) great-grandchildren, 200 years out."

Although the senior vice president position for Jackson Family Wines would appear the pinnacle of her girl-boss success, I have a feeling Keegan's idea of her best life revolves around the days she spends in the vineyards, perhaps hiking her own five acres in Roussillon, France, and being the winegrape-growing farmer she was destined to become. "I'm a dirt-loving gal," she remarked in a decade-old blog she wrote about her Old Vine Grenache project in France. No need to read between the vines there.

"It was a solid life," she said of her youth on her grandfather's farm. "I think that's where I was bitten by the agricultural bug." ■

Would you like to breathe better? Live better?

Naturally, Non-surgically
when other treatments fail for...

Chronic Sinusitis, Allergies, Sleep Apnea, Snoring, Deviated Septum, Mouth Breathing, Chronic Migraine Headaches, Concussion Symptoms.

"My name is Landon Haney, and I am 75 years old. I have had sinus problems off and on since I was a teenager. The most recent one started in 2011. The nose was really, completely plugged off and I heard about Dr. Siegfried. I knew him from past things he had done for me and always helped me, so I called up and came in. He started the treatments on me, and I have had 8 now. I started noticing improvements after about the third one. I have been completely clear for about the last month and a half and the results of it are according to my wife, I no longer snore. I don't have sleep apnea anymore. I am sleeping through the night, and I am breathing really well with no blockage in my nose, it's amazing. I do maintenance treatment as needed to keep me breathing better."

Millions are suffering with one of these conditions. Especially at this time of year. Are you one of them? The medical model is drugs, and possibly surgery like the "roto-rooter", or other terms like sinuplasty, septoplasty, balloon sinuplasty or turbinoplasty. Unfortunately, they are all "missing the target". My model for these conditions, for over 40 years has been the Bilateral Nasal Specific Treatment, a natural, non-surgical approach that awaits you that may help you breathe better. To learn more go to www.nasalspecific.com for videos and testimonials or scan the QR code below.

I have been practicing the Bilateral Nasal Specific Treatment since 1976. As the leading expert in this procedure, I've performed the procedure thousands of times. Most importantly, I've been able to help many many patients. I was "anointed" the protégé of Dr. Stober, who developed, taught, practiced this non-surgical technique in Portland Oregon from 1950 until he passed in 1987. I spent 10 years and over 1,000 hours by his side while treating his patients and Dr. Stober only took maintenance treatments from me to help alleviate his facial and sinus pain he suffered with from a broken nose suffered on the farm growing up.

I joined the Dunn Chiropractic Clinic—A Pain and Wellness Practice since 1922-- in1984, after finishing my tenure living and traveling the world with the 1983/84 Italian Olympic Team's Track and Field Division until after the 1984 Los Angeles Olympics. My regular chiropractic practice includes caring for patients with car accident injuries, regular chiropractic care and also as a certified counselor in whole food nutritional supplements and diet.

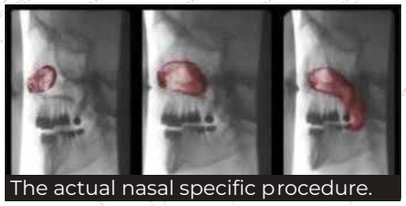

For a limited time only, you can schedule a consultation for only $97 (normally $297) by calling 503-472-6550 on Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 9-12 and 3-6. I look forward to meeting and consulting with you to see if you are a candidate for this potentially life changing procedure.

Dedicated to your health and wellness,

Dr. Siegfried
