LOOKING BACK, MOVING FORWARD

BY MICHELE FRANCISCO, OWP EDITOR

As you follow new resolutions, don't forget to take stock of your previous accomplishments. Daily life often distracts us from seeing the bigger picture. Zoom out to the 30,000-foot view: acknowledging past successes fuels motivation for the year ahead.

I recently reread my ambitions in last January's welcome letter, "Poco a Poco." After living abroad for nearly six months, I've become a more accepting global citizen. Being immersed in different cultures and a foreign language was humbling, deeply enriching— and made me a better person.

Professionally, with help from a robust network, I managed 21 contributors, edited and laid out over 100 articles and wrote nearly 30 Cellar Selects tasting notes and stories. Last year's dozen issues collectively referenced over 1,500 wineries, organizations, associations, events and businesses– an average of 126 per month. I hope you found compelling content and discovered new people, places and events.

A couple weeks ago, while unpacking neglected boxes in our garage, I found copies of the Oregon Wine Press from 2009. I had collected them during visits the year before moving here from California. It was fun to see familiar faces, including someone who would later become my teacher at Chemeketa Community College. Those early issues—primarily black and white—resembled a newspaper. With an updated layout, format and higher-quality paper, OWP has evolved into a true magazine, a reminder of how much our statewide publication has grown over time.

So, as you pursue this year's resolutions, remember: progress happens little by little. Poco a poco, indeed. Cheers to new adventures ahead. ■

Lytle-Barnett was founded in 2013 as a sparkling wine house rooted in Willamette Valley terroir and dedicated to Method Oregon, employing the tradition of vintage-bottled, French Champagne.

Aubaine (pronounced 'O-baine') is the French term for "Windfall" and represents a hyper-focused vision from founder, Andy Lytle: all estate-grown fruit, all single-vineyard bottlings, 100% Eola-Amity Hills AVA.

Together, the wines of Lytle-Barnett | Aubaine celebrate a passion for exemplary craftsmanship and a steadfast belief in the Willamette Valley's established reputation as a world-class wine region.

CELEBRATING COLLEAGUES LOST LAST YEAR

Peter Michael Gladhart

WINEGROWER AND FOUNDER OF WINTER'S HILL ESTATE WINERY

Peter Michael Gladhart was born in Spokane on March 25, 1940. His family (parents Ruth and Russ, and younger sister Mary) later moved to Veradale, where he attended school K-12 and graduated from Central Valley High School. He studied literature at Reed College, joining the Peace Corps after his graduation in 1962. As a volunteer in Ecuador, he met and married Emily Winter. In the town of Mira, the two advised the 4-H Club, worked with Heifer Project, and organized a highly successful sweater-knitting co-op that provided significant income and business opportunities to local women. Ecuador would remain an important place for Peter throughout his life, professionally and personally; he returned for several extended research trips and numerous shorter visits.

In 1966, Peter and Emily left Mira for Dryden, New York. Peter pursued graduate studies at Cornell University and their children Amalia and Russell were born. After he completed his PhD, they moved to East Lansing, where Peter joined the faculty in Human Ecology at Michigan State in 1972. Over the next eighteen years, Peter researched, taught and mentored students in the areas of home energy use, international development and personal finance. Peter and Emily moved to Oregon in 1990, planting grapes on land Emily's parents had purchased in the early 1960s and built Winter's Hill Estate Winery with their son Russell. In semi-retirement, Peter maintained a large vegetable garden, practiced clarinet and piano, and continued to review research proposals for national foundations.

Peter was a versatile musician, lover of poetry, reader, scholar and woodworker. He was active in environmental and social justice causes. He enjoyed tinkering and fixing, and he relished the hands-on management of the vineyard. An attentive and supportive grandfather, Peter loved sharing hiking trips, woodworking projects and music with his grandchildren. He developed lasting relationships in each of the places he lived, friendships he treasured to the end of his life.

Donations in Peter's memory can be made to Heifer International Project, www.heifer.org. ■

Ken Bolick

BELOVED HUSBAND AND SON

Ken Bolick, age 46, passed away peacefully on May 10, surrounded by the love of his family and friends. He is survived by his devoted wife of over 16 years, Isabelle; his parents, Carol and David Peterson of Grayling, Michigan; his brother Tom (Crystal) of Houghton Lake, Michigan; and numerous cherished nieces and nephews.

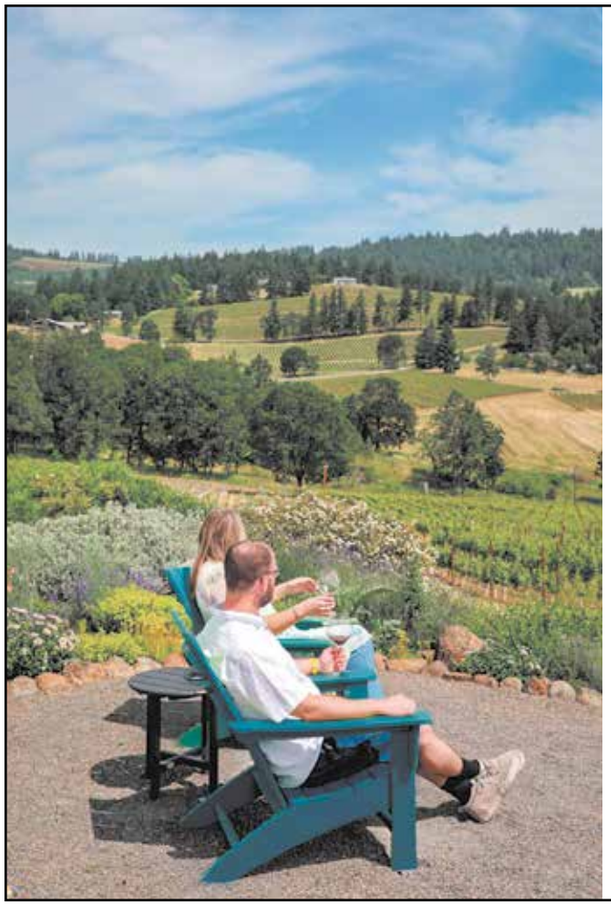

Born and raised in Grayling, Ken's passion for the hospitality industry ignited at the tender age of 14 while working at a local restaurant. This early experience laid the foundation for a rewarding and impactful career in the culinary and wine sectors. A proud McNair Scholar, he graduated with a BFA in American Literature from Grand Valley State University, where he honed his skills and passion for hospitality. Committed to lifelong learning, Ken went on to earn his Executive MBA from Washington State in 2020.

During his college years, Ken thrived as he managed the bar program at Sierra Room in Grand Rapids, where he developed a profound love for wine that would shape his future. In the autumn of 2008, Ken and Isabelle embarked on an adventurous new chapter, relocating to Oregon to immerse themselves in the vibrant Willamette Valley wine industry. His journey included managing the bar program at Carafe in downtown Portland, where he earned certification as a sommelier.

A significant highlight of Ken's career was his tenure at JORY at The Allison Inn & Spa, where he served as restaurant manager and wine director. Under his exceptional leadership, JORY was recognized as a James Beard semi-finalist for three consecutive years for "Outstanding Wine Program." Ken's unwavering dedication to the wine community led him to esteemed roles, including Director of DTC for Archery Summit and properties within Crimson Wine Group, as well as General Manager of Padigan in Southern Oregon. In 2023, he proudly took on the role of General Manager at ROCO, where the RMS brand achieved the remarkable honor of being named the #1 wine of 2024 on Wine Enthusiast's prestigious "The Enthusiast 100" list.

Outside of his impressive professional accomplishments, Ken was celebrated for his culinary talents, love of literature and passion for wine. He was a steadfast friend and mentor, dedicated to treating others with kindness, fairness, and respect. Even with his cancer diagnosis, Ken approached life with characteristic resilience, often reminding those around him to "toughen up, buttercup," inspiring everyone with his strength and positivity.

A celebration of Ken's life will be held at ROCO Winery, 13260 N.E. Red Hills Rd., Newberg, on Tuesday, July 29. Friends and family are warmly invited to join us at any point between 5:30 and 7:30 p.m. to honor Ken's memory and his impact on the lives of many. ■

Bill Stoller

HOW AN OREGONIAN TURNED A FAMILY TURKEY FARM INTO ONE OF THE COUNTRY'S MOST VISIONARY WINE ESTATES

BY AAKANKSHA AGARWAL

Before there was wine, there were turkeys. Hundreds of thousands roamed a sloping stretch of land near Dayton. Here, Bill Stoller spent his childhood summers hauling feed, patching fences and learning the ways of farm life. The land, bought in 1943 by his father and uncle, eventually grew into of Oregon's largest turkey operations.

This rugged farmland would become one of the most ambitious, enterprising wine estates in the Pacific Northwest.

In 1993, the farm went up for sale. By then, Stoller had co-founded Express Employment Professionals now one of the largest privately held staffing firms in the country. Meanwhile, wine inhabited more of his imagination. He had attended wine classes at Portland Community College, traveled to Burgundy and started building a cellar.

Stoller's first major step into the wine industry occurred in the late 1980s when he invested in Ridgecrest Vineyard. That experience, and the understanding he gained of soils and site selection, helped him recognize the potential of his own family's property. In 1993, Stoller deepened his ties to wine by becoming a co-owner of Chehalem Winery. But he didn't stop there.

"When his family's property came onto the market, Bill saw an opportunity to turn his passion into reality," recalled Gary Mortensen, president of Stoller Wine Group. "He believed the land, once home to over 700,000 turkeys, was destined to become a vineyard. He believed its south-facing slope, the ideal Jory volcanic soils, and the property's diverse microclimates across its 400 acres made it unique. From the beginning, his vision was growing grapes that would elevate the state's reputation."

By purchasing the farm, not only did he reclaim his family's history, but also established the groundwork for Oregon's future. Stoller immersed himself in vineyard management and learned from global practices. He never stopped asking questions.

It's tempting to read the story as one of reinvention. But, in truth, it stands as a continuation of the same values Stoller always held: hire good people, build long-term systems and think in centuries, not quarters.

"Throughout his business ventures, one core philosophy remained constant: success comes from investing in people and fostering a strong, supportive culture," Mortensen said.

Wine– like staffing– entails vision, patience and trustworthy people. In 1995, Stoller began planting grapevines. He brought consultants from Burgundy to identify ideal planting sites and avoid mistakes that might take decades to undo. From the beginning, he balanced tradition with technology. He prioritized clonal diversity, paid close attention to slope orientation and considered every block with an extended view. After establishing Pinot Noir and Chardonnay as the estate's foundation, he added small plantings of Pinot Blanc, Riesling, Tempranillo and Syrah.

"He believed the red fruit characteristics and earthiness impacted by the Dundee Hills' Jory soil would help Pinot Noir truly shine, reinforcing his confidence that Oregon was capable of being a world-class wine region," explained Mortensen.

"Bill always believed anything built or planted should serve future generations," he added.

That ethos extended to the land itself. He preserved one of the largest private oak savannas in the Northwest and introducing bird-friendly systems, raptor perches, pollinator pathways and early regenerative practices. He became a solar energy advocate.

"Bill was also an early adopter of solar energy, integrating renewable power into the estate's operations long before it was common practice," Mortensen stated.

When building the reserve winery and heritage tasting room, he insisted it last 200 years. Stoller Family Estate became the first winery in the world to receive LEED Gold certification.

"When designing the reserve winery, Bill was introduced to town of his childhood," explained Susan Sokol Blosser, founder of Sokol Blosser Winery and Yamhill Enrichment Society. "He helped fund school programs and restored the historic main street. He didn't have to do that. He made a lot of money through his business acumen and spent some of it helping to resuscitate his hometown. He will be remembered for his generosity."

By the 2010s, Stoller Wine Group had grown into one of the most respected operations in the Willamette Valley. And that, according to Mortensen, always came down to people.

"When hiring, we look for individuals who genuinely like people. Strong values, clear communication and a willingness to learn are more important to us than technical knowledge of wine. The soft skills come first—wine expertise can be taught," Mortensen explained.

"Bill's business philosophy was always centered on the people and culture you build. When you surround yourself with talented, value-driven people and create a culture rooted in trust, innovation and accountability, everything else will follow," Mortensen noted. "Creating the right environment and empowering the team to carry these values forward is, in his view, half the battle."

Founding winemaker Melissa Burr, who worked more than two decades alongside Stoller, remembers how deeply that trust shaped her, from the earliest years of their working relationship.

"In 2005, we had recently moved into the new estate winery, and Bill was away traveling for work during harvest," Burr recalled. "I made a small lot of Pinot Noir rosé, only 100 cases. It wasn't something we had planned, but I thought it would be great for the tasting room."

During his next visit, Stoller noticed the rosé. "He asked, 'What is this?'... I told him it was rosé, and he said, 'I don't even like rosé. We didn't talk about making rosé.'" She braced for opposition. Rather than overruling her, he paused, nodded... and moved on.

That decision would become one of the most consequential in the winery's portfolio. Today, Stoller annually produces nearly 20,000 cases of rosé.

"It's one of my favorite 'I told you so' stories," Burr confesses. "But it also showed just how much he trusted me. He gave me the space to grow as a winemaker. That shaped my confidence more than I can say."

Burr continued, "Bill gave me so much creative license. That level of trust– being able to craft wines on a site that meant everything to him– shaped my entire winemaking philosophy. He had this rare combination of intuition and patience. He thought really far out, way beyond what most people could see and made decisions with this quiet dignity that was so uniquely Bill."

Just as he had faith in her, Stoller believed in the larger community.

"Bill was deeply invested in the people behind the wine, especially those who weren't always visible," Burr remembered. "He supported programs like ¡Salud!, welcomed countless fundraisers at the estate and gave generously to local causes. But he never sought credit. He just quietly showed up, over and over again."

The estate expanded, along with Stoller's belief that great wine wasn't exclusively for collectors or connoisseurs. In 2018, not only did he launch Chemistry and Canned Oregon, value-driven labels intended for a broader market, but also assumed full ownership of Chehalem Wines.

"Chemistry wines are made for the weekly wine drinker, rooted in the belief everyone should have access to high-quality Willamette Valley wines priced accessibly in the $14–$25 range," stated Mortensen. "Meanwhile, Canned Oregon and Stoller Swing met a growing demand for alternative package formats, enabling Stoller Wine Group to strategically offer a broader the idea of LEED certification through the architect. It was something he hadn't pursued before. Eager to learn, Bill embraced the process and all its standards," recalled Mortensen. "For Bill, achieving LEED Gold certification wasn't about checking a box; it aligned with values he had already put into place."

Unlike many winery founders of the era, Stoller was Oregon-born and had worked this land as a teenager.

"For Bill, planting a vineyard on this land was more than a business decision. It was a deeply personal, full-circle connection," Mortensen remembered. "Back then, few Oregon wineries were started by Oregonians, and none were on multi-generational land. That vision, rooted in legacy, focused on the future, guiding us today." And it reaches beyond the vineyard.

"People talk about Bill's impact in the wine world, but it can be found everywhere in Dayton, the

William (Bill) Charles Cattrall

CO-FOUNDER OF CATTRALL BROTHERS VINEYARD

Bill Charles Cattrall

William Charles Cattrall, 77, died peacefully on Tuesday, May 6, 2025, at his home on the farm in Amity, surrounded by his family.

Bill was born December 29, 1947, in Salem, Oregon, the son of John and Verna Bond Cattrall. He grew up in Macleay and Salem, attending local schools before graduating from North Salem High School in 1966. He studied at Oregon State University before enlisting in the U.S. Army in 1968. Stationed in Italy, he developed a lifelong love of wine and travel that would shape the rest of his life.

After four years of military service, Bill returned to the family farm, where he began cultivating wine grapes, wheat and other crops. In 1973, he planted Cattrall Brothers Vineyard, Oregon's first organic-certified vineyard, using Pinot Noir cuttings from pioneering vintner David Lett. In the 1970s, he worked as vineyard manager for both Knudsen-Erath Winery and Eyrie Vineyards. His commitment to sustainable agriculture and quiet leadership in the field was recognized with the Oregon Wine Board's Founders Award in 2022. The Cattrall family farm was designated a Century Farm in 2017, an honor Bill had dreamed of achieving.

On a snowy April day in 1982, Bill married Carol Stromsness, and together they raised two daughters. Bill was preceded in death by his parents, John and Verna. He is survived by his wife Carol, his brother Tom, his daughters Julia Cattrall (Director of Winemaking, Duck Pond Cellars) and Laura Potts-Cattrall (Brian), and his beloved grandchildren, Magnolia and Cameron.

A carpenter and farmer by trade, Bill was a true renaissance man. He could build anything out of wood—homes, cedar-strip kayaks, furniture, musical instruments, even woodblock art. He once enrolled in classes at Oregon College of Education just to learn how to sew, weave and draw. He was a skilled fisherman who tied his own flies, a kayaker, hiker, tinkerer and genealogist who delighted in connecting with distant relatives and ancestral homelands. He loved old farm equipment and spent countless hours restoring tractors and trucks with his brother.

Bill was an extraordinary father who taught his daughters to prune grapevines, hunt for fossils and even build their own house. He was a steady, generous presence in his community—always ready to coach a team, build a set for the school play or help rebuild a playground.

Even in his final months, Bill continued tending the vineyard, shepherding it through more than fifty vintages. A lifelong conservationist and devoted steward of the land, he leaves behind a legacy of care, craftsmanship and quiet perseverance.

Memorial contributions may be made to Friends of the Amity Public Library, PO Box 470, Amity, OR 97101. Bill was a lifelong reader who borrowed countless books over the years and deeply valued his local library. ■

Philippe Girardet

WINEGROWER AND FOUNDER OF GIRARDET VINEYARDS AND WINERY

BY JACK COSTA

Philippe Girardet, founder of Girardet Vineyards and Winery in Tenmile, Oregon, has passed away at the age of 96. The Swiss-American was an astrophysics engineer at the California Institute of Technology (Caltech) in California before moving north to Oregon, where he established one of Roseburg's oldest continually operating wineries.

Philippe bought a 1965 Volkswagen bus and headed north in search of a fresh start. Upon visiting the Umpqua Valley, he was reminded of his homeland's rolling hills. He recognized the area's viticultural potential after tasting the wines of Richard Sommer, the pioneering founder of HillCrest Vineyard. Having worked in his uncle's vineyards while growing up in Switzerland, Philippe retained a lifelong connection to wine.

In 1970, Philippe and his wife Bonnie Girardet purchased a 55-acre former sheep farm near Tenmile, where they began building a cabin. Over a bottle of wine, they decided the property would make the perfect place for a vineyard. By 1971, Philippe set off cross-country in his Volkswagen, collecting grapevine cuttings — including Baco Noir, the wine Philippe would later become famous for. Upon returning to Oregon, the bus looked like a beaver dam, packed full of vine twigs and cuttings from around the country.

Although Philippe introduced Baco Noir to Umpqua Valley soil in 1971, he initially sold fruit to other wineries and didn't make wine himself. However, a decade later, after nearly crashing his truck while delivering grapes, he decided, "It's time we stop delivering grapes and start making our own wine!"

By the early 1980s, the Girardets were producing their own wines, and in 1990, Philippe bottled Oregon's first 100% Baco Noir — an unheard-of varietal for the region at the time. The wine quickly earned a devoted following for its spicy, herbal notes and silky-smooth tannins, and was later recognized by The Oregonian's Matt Kramer as "one of Oregon's best reds."

Philippe became known locally as the "Johnny Appleseed of Baco Noir," handing out vine cuttings to any winemaker who showed interest. Today, several Umpqua Valley wineries, including Bradley Vineyards, River's Edge, Melrose Vineyards, and Trella Vineyards — grow and produce their own Baco Noir thanks to his influence.

In 2005, Philippe and Bonnie received the Oregon Wine Founders Award by the Oregon Wine Board in recognition of their pioneering work in the Oregon wine industry. Philippe was also a founding member of the Umpqua Valley Winegrowers Association and an advocate for the Umpqua Valley AVA since its establishment in 1984.

Philippe is survived by his five children, including Marc Girardet, who serves as winemaker and owner of Girardet Winery. ■

OWP invites wineries to submit bottles for "blind" evaluation by a seasoned panel led by a wine expert. Cellar Selects presents a great opportunity for brands to gain media attention without any submission fee. OWP never includes negative reviews; only panel-approved wines are published. Asterisks are Panel Picks.

STOLLER FAMILY ESTATE

Stoller Family Estate stands among Oregon's most respected vineyards and wineries. Founded in 1993, Bill Stoller transformed his family's second-generation farm into the largest contiguous vineyard in the Dundee Hills and established the world's first LEED® Gold certified winery. Guided by his 200-year vision, we steward this 400-acre estate with long-term responsibility as a certified B Corp.

Certifiably Good

LEARN MORE ABOUT THE LIVE PROGRAM

BY PATTY MAMULA

Whether drinking wine or eating crackers, consumers are increasingly interested in sustainability. They want to know what they eat and drink is healthy for them and the environment. Wine lovers now have access to numerous certifications to determine the sustainable levels of their favorite wineries.

Formed in 1997 by a small group of Willamette Valley winegrowers, LIVE certification remains one of the most important in the Northwest. It ensures a winery or vineyard has met or exceeded specific standards. The organization measures greenhouse gas emissions, promotes regenerative farming practices and carbon sequestration, protects and restores oak habitats, and minimizes impacts on local rivers and streams.

A significant aspect of LIVE certification is the year-over-year improvement requisite, said Carrie Kalscheuer, chief brand officer at Ponzi Vineyards. "When I'm serving wine at events around the country, I stress how LIVE continually monitors annual improvement," she said.

Herb Quady, owner of Quady North winery in Jacksonville and a LIVE board member, said, "LIVE is more relevant than organic or biodynamic designations because its standards do more to address winery-specific issues. It has a broader reach."

"The standards revolve around the following six areas," said Chris Serra, executive director of LIVE: Climate Action, Biodiversity, Worker Rights, Soil Health, Pesticide Reduction and Natural Resource Conservation. LIVE is a 501 (c)(3) nonprofit supporting environmentally and socially responsible winegrowing through third-party certification and educational programming. Or, as LIVE board member Katherine Cole said, "It means someone cared."

Although the certification process is laborious, time-consuming and costly, it demonstrates how the winery or vineyard cares regards its product, consumers, the environment, land and water. It also values people, the community and its reputation.

The LIVE third-party certification is not a sole process. Members receive regular evaluations by a third-party inspector. Annual desk inspections recur between site visits. The inspector assesses all aspects of LIVE compliance along with recordkeeping.

Constant progress is paramount to the LIVE philosophy, explains Quady. "Wineries are asked to choose an action item, work on it, then pick another." His 2023 special project focused on recycling plastic stretch film. "It's ubiquitous at wineries and just gets tossed, but there is an Oregon company, Agri-Plas, that recycles it." He helped develop community plastic recycling hubs. "Last year, Quady North recycled 30 cubic yards of it."

Serra said, "The wine industry's biggest contributor to carbon is the glass bottle. The lighter the bottle, the less energy it takes to make and ship them. It's why some wineries are adopting alternative packaging."

But how does a winery quantify its carbon footprint? LIVE's Excel Greenhouse calculator requires a variety of quantifiable data, including water and energy use, wastewater, transportation from the winery to distributors, as well as emissions and ratings for glass bottles. The final calculation determines an entity's environmental impact.

Quady said, "I want to focus on reducing my carbon footprint, especially regarding our packaging. Last year, about 10 percent of our production went into bag-in-box, kegs and can formats. We also started using Revino, a reusable wine bottle consumers can return to various Oregon wineries or collection sites. The bottles are then washed and filled again," he said.

"Our 3-liter bag-in-box format is especially popular with restaurants because the wine stays fresher than in an open bottle. The packaging is recyclable and about 25 percent less expensive, making its impact on the planet nine times less than the equivalent in medium-weight bottles," said Quady.

At Ponzi Vineyards head winemaker Luisa Ponzi, also a LIVE board member, said one of their action items was to work on reducing water use. "For LIVE, we track how much water is used to make a gallon of wine. It's straightforward. We have flow meters everywhere," she said.

One way to minimize water use, Ponzi said, is cleaning a tank more effectively. "There are more efficient foam systems now," she said. "We also focus on the time necessary to clean a barrel. Maybe we don't need 10 minutes. We're more conscious of how we use our resources. We also developed a habit of turning off lights."

Serra said LIVE certification satisfies both Salmon Safe and Bee-Friendly designations. "Our certification automatically ensures protection of water ways, fish habitats and supports pollinator health and biodiversity because it encompasses the entire property," he said. A successful LIVE inspection establishes all three certifications.

The LIVE organization itself has supported projects for the wine industry. In 2021, LIVE joined Growing Oaks, a student-led, Willamette University organization, with a goal of collecting 30,000 acorns to plant 11,000 sapling White Oaks. The project aims to grow these trees for 50 years, thereby offsetting the Oregon wine industry's estimated carbon emissions.

Current LIVE membership numbers are 333 vineyards and 27 wineries. Why so many more vineyards than wineries? Quady said, "There are simply more vineyards than wineries, probably five times more."

> "Our certification automatically ensures protection of water ways, fish habitats and supports pollinator health and biodiversity because it encompasses the entire property." — Chris Serra, LIVE's executive director

Ponzi believes agriculture has always been a more common path for sustainability. Vineyard certification is more straightforward, with obvious ways to improve year after year.

"Winery certification is still considered a new part of LIVE's efforts. When consumers see the LIVE logo they don't necessarily separate the winery from the vineyards," she said.

Although Ponzi was one of the first wineries to become LIVE certified, it lapsed after a few years. "The paperwork and tracking of outputs proved difficult," Ponzi said, "but we recently became certified again."

She said the industry has become more focused on sustainability. "It's in the public eye." Kalscheuer said national polls confirm the trend. Since 2021, consumer polling shows a 30 percent increase in the importance of environmental impact when making product purchases. She believes there's an increased interest in health since the pandemic and younger buyers making healthier choices.

Ponzi said, "Wineries are receiving more support from LIVE. There's more energy behind it." A tech group meets regularly to examine stumbling blocks for wineries.

"One of the issues we have discussed involves the provision about construction materials," said Quady. "We asked 'does this requirement prohibit wineries that might want to join?' After reviewing, we decided to change the standard from 'required' to a 'bonus item.'"

LIVE standards derive from the International Organization for Biological Control, which accredits LIVE every year. "Any program changes we want to make goes through them," said Serra.

Serra said the most difficult area for vineyard certification remains pest management because weather and environmental conditions vary annually.

Isabelle Tobe, LIVE's communications coordinator, said, "We regularly host tech meetings where growers discuss pest management because they are changing all the time. We hear feedback centered on people, planet and practices." These meetings might generate ideas for changing the standards. Thus, the process adjusts as needed; it doesn't remain static.

Cole said, "Sustainability really matters to consumers. In this very competitive market, consumers are looking for wineries that care." In a recent Full Glass study, 71 percent of respondents said, "all things being equal, I would purchase or support a wine that is sustainably produced over one that is not."

Tobe highlighted how the LIVE certificate on a wine bottle back label means it was a local product made in the Northwest.

"What we hear from our wineries," Cole said, "is that one of the main pillars to sustainability is economic viability." As wineries and vineyards continue refining sustainable practices, those decisions improve their bottom line. "LIVE certification is a long-term investment," she said.

Kalscheuer agreed. "We see that sustainable practices grow better fruit and make superior wine."

In spring, cover crops of Winter Rye, Crimson Clover and Austrian Winter Peas thrive, adjusting nitrogen and enriching the soil. By crimping rather than tilling, Ponzi enhances carbon sequestration, maintains soil moisture, and regulates temperature, supporting vine health naturally without irrigation or inorganic fertilizers. ABOVE: A Quady North employee wraps a pallet of wine with plastic stretch film. Good Vibrations

LEARN HOW MUSIC IMPACTS THE TASTE OF WINE

BY GAIL OBERST

We're sitting under a gigantic oak, which spreads welcome shade across the field below Lumos Wine Company in Philomath. To the west, Wren Vineyard and the Coast Range create an idyllic backdrop to the winery building, a gigantic barn built in the late 1930s. In front of us, a tie-dye-clad band aptly named Summer of Love plays the Grateful Dead's "Sugar Magnolia." In my hand, a glass of Aligoté; my friend is sipping a summer special sangria on ice, a fitting match with music from 1967.

Was this melodic match planned to enhance the wine experience? I ask PK McCoy, winery owner with Dai Crisp and their family. McCoy admits it was a clever idea, but no, not planned. Drink offerings are similar for all Lumos Wine's summer music events, from classical piano concerts to rockabilly, blues and jazz performances.

Everything tastes more delicious and is particularly poignant while listening to music, I remark to my pals, not for the first time. "My guess is you're going to write a story about it," observes one. My friends roll their eyes and inch away from my wandering camera. They know me well.

MUSIC CHANGES TASTE

Days later, my interest in wine and music pairing led me to Susan Boe, founder of "What Does Music Taste Like," a technology and entertainment company. Extensive research led her to create an interactive platform that explores how wine and food taste when consumers listen to specific music. Pairing music and wine isn't solely about choosing the right songs but identifying the vibrations that enhance flavors, texture and mouthfeel, Boe shared.

Although based in New York, Boe's company has worked with wineries in the West, including A to Z Wineworks in the Willamette Valley.

Boe has made a career of the harmonic tasting concept. Her research suggests the vibrations of particular songs, even short excerpts, can alter the perception of a wine's flavor.

A musical mix could bypass all the fancy jargon and rating systems to create an appealing

LEARN MORE ABOUT CELLAR SELECTS

BY MICHELE FRANCISCO

Psst…Let me share a secret with you. Wine nerds adore geeking out over the beverage. Honestly, we can't get enough of it.

While attending Chemeketa's Wine Studies program nearly 15 years ago, not only did I learn how to grow and make wine, but also studied the technical aspects of wine evaluation. Critical analysis is fundamental to the process, so having a thorough comprehension of wine's various flaws and faults is crucial. Judging countless Northwest wine competitions since my school days, along with sampling an estimated 1,000 wines each year, continues to strengthen my detection-honing skills and heighten my senses.

Needless to say, I'm serious about assessing wine.

A 2022 study, commissioned by the Oregon Wine Board, estimates Oregon's wine industry contributes $8.1 billion annually in statewide economic impact. And, because winemakers only get their chance once a year, I feel critics should be similarly thoughtful when evaluating wine. I have profound respect for everyone crafting Northwest wines and consider my role both a privilege and an honor.

My detailed wine knowledge and education proved invaluable when developing Oregon Wine Press' rigorous process for evaluating the Cellar Selects wines highlighted in each issue. I lead our unpaid panel through each comprehensive critical tasting. Primarily composed of wine professionals from a variety of backgrounds, I like to include "ordinary" consumers, too. I find tasting with people not employed in the industry both refreshing and enlightening. Because they don't speak in wine jargon, I frequently learn from them. Many readers are simply wine lovers, so our panel should also represent them.

To avoid suffering palate fatigue, our panel rarely evaluates more than 25 to 30 wines during a sitting. However, this frequently means hosting several tastings each month. Happily, the extra effort pays off. I regularly receive positive feedback about the chosen wines from both consumers and wineries.

Let's get into the nitty-gritty details.

Most importantly, all wines are evaluated double blind. Commonly used in competitions, this method guarantees no taster knows which wine brand is being assessed. Tasting blind eliminates any possible biases, allowing each taster to focus solely on the wine, judging it on its individual merits and characteristics, rather than the packaging or label. Often, Oregon Wine Press panel participants know nothing more than the grape variety. This is accomplished by removing (or covering) any identifiers on the neck before placing each bottle in a numbered tube sock.

To minimize distractions, many variables remain constant for each panel tasting. We begin with fresh palates, use the same type of stemware and a white tablecloth (to better see color) and practice spitting, with dump buckets close at hand. Since music can influence taste, we don't play any– or even speak– while assessing each sample. These simple measures guarantee everyone remains focused on the wine in their glasses.

First impressions can be valuable, although they don't reveal a wine's complex nuances. After a short break, we run through all the submissions again, uncovering further distinctions in the process. If anyone has questions or wants to revisit a wine, we taste it a third time.

This method supports our preliminary evaluation as the panel eliminates wines with faults and considers if minor flaws are acceptable (they usually aren't). Much like judging a wine competition, we trade opinions on which best represents the grape variety, discussing (and sometimes debating) the aroma, flavor, texture, acidity level, tannins, style and finish of each numbered bottle.

But we're not done yet…The wines, still in tube socks, are stored overnight in the refrigerator. You have undoubtedly experienced how a wine can change and evolve within your glass as time passes. Since bottles often improve, we retaste the samples twice more on day two.

Only after I have comprehensive notes for each chosen wine do we pull off the socks, revealing the labels. This excitement is akin to the anticipation you felt as a kid on Christmas morning. Panel members marvel, cheer, clap and sometimes groan as each bottle is unveiled. When a favorite producer isn't selected, we lament over "killing our darling." Believe me, we've killed plenty of darlings over the years. However, remaining unbiased is essential to the process. We are thrilled to discover new wines and derive pleasure from selecting trusted brands.

You too can increase your wine knowledge by enrolling in Chemeketa's annual Sensory Evaluation of Wine Components course, held at the Northwest Wine Studies Center, located on the Eola campus. Learn how to detect flaws and faults while realizing your individual thresholds and tolerance levels in a technical setting. Believe me, you will significantly enhance your tasting ability for the minimal enrollment fee.

Next time you flip to the Cellar Selects pages, lined with bottle shots and tasting notes, I ask you to remember the time and effort required to choose those wines. And, please don't forget to congratulate the wineries with your purchases.

Author's note:
While I traveled in Central America, John Eliassen managed the Cellar Selects tastings. As a French-trained winemaker (his label was La Bete Wines), beer brewer, distiller and Le Cordon Bleu College of Culinary Arts instructor, Cellar Selects was in exceptional hands during my absence. Always timely, I thoroughly enjoyed working together. Sadly, John lost his battle with cancer a few months ago. With much love and gratitude, RIP, dear friend.

suite of brands at a range of price points and styles."

Last month, Stoller Wine Group acquired Elouan, a popular wine brand sold across the U.S., made with Oregon grapes. This acquisition increases Stoller's annual case production to 300,000 and substantially expands the distribution footprint across the country both on- and off-premise.

Though Stoller was never one to seek the spotlight, his contributions didn't go unnoticed. In 2024, he received the Diploma of Honor from the Fédération Internationale des Confréries Bachiques. Earlier this year, the Oregon Wine Board honored him with a Lifetime Achievement Award.

During the ceremony, Stoller said: "Being a part of the Oregon wine story has been one of the greatest privileges of my life. Every time I pour a bottle of our wine, I share a piece of my home. I am grateful for the opportunity to help build our industry, making this honor all the more meaningful."

That humble, deeply personal sentiment reflected the way he approached hospitality. "Bill was an entrepreneur and businessman at heart," Mortensen recalled. "He often pointed out the difference between business-to-business and business-to-consumer sales, and how the latter demands a deeper focus on relationships. At Stoller, our top priority is delivering exceptional hospitality at every level."

He continued, "When you have great people, guests return and bring others with them. Because they know they'll experience thoughtful service, outstanding wine and an unforgettable view."

Stoller, who died in April, built something bigger than a winery. He built a model for sustainability, for inclusion, for what it means to grow with integrity.

"Bill always had a knack for seeing around the corner," Mortensen reflected. "In our many conversations, growth was a constant theme, not just for Stoller Wine Group, but for the Oregon wine industry as a whole. He believed change is inevitable, and those who adapt will thrive. If we evolve together, we have the potential to become one of the great wine regions of the world."

Ultimately, it wasn't awards or acclaim that defined his story. It was the vineyard rows stretching across the soil he once shoveled as a boy, the families gathered on the lawn and the steadfast oak tree with the tire swing.

"It is a great honor to carry his vision and legacy forward," Mortensen noted. ■ wine-tasting experience for new and younger wine drinkers, Boe suggested. For two years, beginning with tests on focus groups, thousands of What Does Music Taste Like participants tasted wines while listening to various music. The testing program included feedback from sound engineers, musicians and wine experts. The tasters' reactions were surprising. In some cases, initial tests indicated a lack of enthusiasm for a wine, yet after listening to specific music, participants changed their minds.

"They thought we were brainwashing them," Boe said with a laugh. "But it's science– and art. It's not merely mood-based. Wine has a structure, and so does music."

What Does Music Taste Like curates playlists and events to enhance a winery's offerings.

Though her company is unique, Boe isn't the only expert offering tips on elevating the wine experience with music. In his book, "A Practical Guide to Pairing Wine and Music," Clark Smith refers to a 2011 Oxford University study that supports Boe's findings. For example, the Oxford study discovered test participants associated various wine aromas with corresponding snippets of piano, woodwind, string and bass instruments.

Boe believes pairing wine and music is not a rigid intellectual exercise but a multisensory experience, offering a unique way to attract a broad range of wine drinkers.

AMBIANCE PART OF THE PLEASURE

I'd like to see a study on the role a warm Oregon evening and good friends play in the taste of wine– I suspect a starring part. I'm still waiting for the scientists to confirm I'm right… But I digress.

Oregon winemakers I spoke with about wine and music admitted their entertainment choices were based more on personal preference and background rather than scientific or market analyses. They were, however, interested in the studies.

No better example is Joe Allan and Karen Saul's lineup at Andante Vineyard. For a winery named after a musical expression found in classical music, one might expect subdued concerts. Yet, the Dallas winery has hosted Nashville songwriters, folk and Americana, jazz, opera singers and a Salem string quartet, as well as a small symphony group from Portland. Andante's musical choices reflect the owners' preferences, along with those of their guests. "Joe is an accomplished pianist whose Steinway B Model Grand costs more than his tractors," confessed Saul, with a note of pride rather than pique.

"Music and wine make a harmonious match," Saul explained.

Do you have opinions about which wines pair best with certain types of music? I ask her.

Yes, she exclaimed, "I've tried them all with every kind of music myself!" For example, Saul prefers dancing with a bigger red or listening to Hungarian music while sipping a white or sparkling wine. Her customers frequently choose their glasses of Andante wine based on what they are feeling, or on the venue– sometimes before they arrive. Cold, indoor events or warm summer days outside create different desires for wines, Saul noted. Music contributes additional pleasure while drinking a glass of wine, but many factors can impact a person's experience, she acknowledged.

Her favorite music and wine experience?

"While my husband plays the piano, I relax in an Adirondack patio chair, sip my wine and take in our beautiful place. It's just ecstatic– and I think many of our guests feel the same." ■

2025 OWP PERSON OF THE YEAR

Andrew Davis

The Radiant Sparkling Wine Company and Lytle-Barnett

We're all familiar with the Paul Revere-type revolutionary who shouts loudly while galloping on horseback. However, not all revolutionaries draw attention to themselves. Some busily move mountains and affect real change in a quiet, reserved manner. It's my pleasure to introduce you to someone who has significantly influenced Oregon's wine industry—yet, whose name you probably don't know.

But first, let me set the stage. Imagine it's 2013. Back then, only a handful of Oregon wineries were making sparkling wine using the traditional method (like they do in Champagne). The most widely known is Argyle Winery, whose founder and head winemaker, Rollin Soles, is leaving to focus on ROCO Winery, a project he shares with wife, Corby.

Another member of his winemaking team is also departing to launch an unusual business model. He plans to produce traditional method sparkling wines for existing wineries looking to join the bubbles game, but lacking the specialized, expensive equipment.

This revolutionary is Andrew Davis, and he is the 2025 Oregon Wine Press Person of the Year. Read on to learn why he was selected.

Davis started The Radiant Sparkling Wine Company the following year, in 2014. As he tells it, "I begged, borrowed and stole what I could. My father loaned me money, and I gave Rollin and Corby a small share of the business to get it off the ground. They were so generous and helpful. I had a duo gyro and small disgorging line tucked into a corner of the ROCO winery building. It was great."

Since then, Davis estimates The Radiant Sparkling Wine Company has bottled over 350,000 cases of bubbles for his many clients. That's an annual average of 32,000 cases– more than most Oregon wineries produce in a year. Davis, with his foresight, education and training, has been instrumental in creating an entirely new category for Oregon wine. Before Radiant, there were white, rosé and red. Now we have sparkling, too.

When I point this out to Davis, he replies, "That gives me more credit than I deserve. But I did open the door, that's what was needed. And crafting sparkling is very technical, so new producers can be apprehensive. They worry about making a mistake and not catching it. And then making another vintage and compounding that mistake… and making another vintage and not realizing the mistake until three years later."

Davis adds, "Suddenly, they've got all this inventory that's shot. I'm not here to tell people what style they should be making. Instead, I'm here to bounce ideas off of and tell them what they need to do to get ready so they don't have a problem."

At Radiant, Davis takes his clients' finished still wine and adds bubbles using the traditional method, where a second fermentation occurs inside each bottle. He puts his post-graduate degree in viticulture and oenology from New Zealand's Lincoln University to good use. And Oregon wine has greatly benefited from his technical expertise.

"I have enough knowledge behind me to help the industry avoid some of the bigger pitfalls and downright silly mistakes. Those 'you don't know what you don't know until you know it' kind of missteps. I think that's why we've been able to hit the ground running. We now have a second wave of 40 or 50 new producers with no background making sparkling, yet they're crafting some pretty good wines," explains Davis.

Consumer education is a key component. Traditionally-made sparkling wine is the most labor-intensive way to produce bubbles. This method produces the finest, longest-lasting bubbles and texture.

"I really think people understand still wine. They know it comes from grapes, and still think you need to stomp on them to extract the juice. That juice goes into a barrel and ferments, then a winemaker comes along to taste the barrels and blends them together before putting the wine into a bottle with a cork stopper," observes Davis.

"They can mentally visualize the whole process with sparkling too. They're pretty sure it comes from grapes, which are pressed… then there's a gray cloud… before a popping noise. Even people who have worked in the industry for their entire lives can have misconceptions about what's going on in the amorphous gray cloud between juice and pop," Davis laughs. "So, education not only brings more knowledge to the table, but, as people understand something, they appreciate it more."

Davis continues, "It's a gross exaggeration, but still wines almost make themselves, going through the fermentation process without any help. If you don't do anything, it will happen on its own. But you will never have a bottle of sparkling on your own. It takes intervention and technical prowess. It requires preparation, forethought and precision."

Along with running Radiant, Davis is head winemaker for Lytle-Barnett, one of only a few Oregon brands focused exclusively on traditional method sparkling wines. In its first year, Davis made 400 cases of sparkling wine. Today, he makes 10 times that amount for Lytle-Barnett, now the second-largest sparkling producer in the state.

From the beginning, Oregon's wine industry has attracted visionaries and protectors. We develop self-imposed standards much stricter than the Feds require. If a bottle says it's from Oregon, consumers can be confident that 100 percent of the fruit was grown here. Federal rules only require 75 percent. To list a specific Oregon growing region, 95 percent of the fruit must come from there, as opposed to the federally mandated 85 percent. In order for an Oregon winery to list a specific grape variety on a label, such as Pinot Noir, it must contain at least 90 percent of the stated grape. Federal laws only command 75 percent. (Oregon does follow the federal percentages for 18 grape varieties.) Some state rules are more nuanced, but these examples provide a general sense of our rigorous standards, all designed to elevate "Brand Oregon."

Davis notes, "When you apply for a label application, there isn't a box to tick stating how the bubbles in the bottle were created. Some wineries, either out of ignorance or just because it sounds better, are putting the term 'sparkling wine' on bottles that aren't in fact legally considered such. Technically, if a wine is forced carbonated, like Coca-Cola, the label should say 'carbonated wine,' not 'sparkling wine.' I've railed about this for years."

As sparkling wine gains popularity, a small group of Oregon producers aims to develop clearer, more exacting label criteria. This groundswell has been dubbed "Method Oregon." Davis and his colleagues hope to avoid consumer confusion by imposing standards that make it easy to determine which process was used to create the bubbles. Identifying sparkling wine produced using the traditional method should be simple. "It will come with an assurance to the customer, they know 'Method Oregon' means quality," adds Davis.

Although Davis sold The Radiant Sparkling Wine Company to Vinovate Custom Wine Services last May, he remains at the helm, for now.

When asked about the future of Oregon sparkling wine, Davis first offers some perspective. "For many of the old-world iconic wine regions, there's a new-world equivalent. Bordeaux-Napa. Stylistically, they're distinctive yet both iconic expressions of the Cabernet Sauvignon grape. Burgundy-Oregon. Stylistically, they are slightly different, but no one would argue that both regions aren't producing exceptional quality wines."

He notes that "every single wine region in the world seems to have a little bit of sparkling if you look hard enough around the corners. Some more than others. But no one has reached for that gold ring and said, 'We are going to be the icon equivalent to Champagne.' In part because Champagne squashes all competition. It doesn't really want that."

While a number of Champagne houses have set up shop in California, Davis feels "the Champenois don't see it as a competition. These are $25 bottles, not $80-100 bottles. Besides, it's really too hot there to produce great, finesse-driven bubbles. On the other hand, Oregon has an ideal climate for sparkling wine."

As this second wave of producers gain more knowledge and experience, Davis believes a third wave will follow. "We'll see bigger investments and the industry will develop on a larger scale. This will allow the world to see the Willamette Valley as the iconic equivalent of Champagne. But it's going to take time. We're literally 13 years into the second wave," he observes.

Our burgeoning sparkling category is quite youthful when compared to Champagne. The famous Dom Pérignon brand offers its P2 program, where bottles are aged at least 15 years. "Oregon's second wave hasn't even existed long enough to match the aging of those bottles, much less the ones aged 20+ years," Davis declares.

"While this second wave includes so many new participants, they fall into two buckets: generalists and specialists. The generalists are wineries adding another SKU to their existing lineup… but those rarely extend beyond the wine club or tasting room," Davis asserts. "The specialists are doing nothing but sparkling. Those four or five wineries are challenging the norms by experimenting with unique clones and new vineyard sites. Places like Corollary, Domaine Willamette, Arabilis and Lytle-Barnett are pushing the industry forward. That's going to be the driving force to get the recognition and attract bigger brands with the ability to spread out beyond the tasting room. That's what we need to see."

At the start of our interview, Davis shared why he was drawn to bubbles. "I realized that if someone's got a glass of sparkling in their hand, they're smiling. It is so much better than any other beverage. It's jovial. It's enjoyment. It's pleasure. I wanted to be a part of that."

As we wrapped up, he tells me, "I'm very proud of the people I get to work with in the industry and am really excited to be helping them. But it should never be about me– it should be about the wines coming out of Oregon. I just want to be the guy behind the curtain. And make sure this tide continues to rise."

Revolutions bring major change. Oregon's sparkling wine movement might remain stuck in 2013 without Andrew Davis and his vision for the future. It's fitting to learn this revolutionary has had his hand in millions of bottles of sparkling wine over his career, spreading joy with every cork popped. I'd say mission accomplished. ■

Tired of Sinus Headaches, Poor Sleep, Snoring, Sleep Apnea, or Constant Congestion?

Discover the Natural, Non-Surgical Solution That Thousands Have Used to Finally Breathe Freely

Are you struggling with:

- Chronic sinus pressure and headaches?
- Poor sleep due to snoring or breathing issues?
- Constant congestion that never seems to clear?
- Allergies that make every season miserable?

Breathe Better Now!

The actual nasal specific procedure.

You've probably tried everything: medications, sprays, maybe even been told you need surgery. But what if the real solution was simpler, safer, and completely natural?

The Secret Most Doctors Miss

After 40+ years specializing in sinus and breathing issues, I've discovered that most conventional treatments miss the root cause: the sphenoid bone at the center of your head.
While other doctors recommend drugs, CPAP machines, or invasive surgeries with weeks of recovery, my approach is different. The Bilateral Nasal Specific Technique is a gentle, non-surgical adjustment that helps your body heal naturally.
No Drugs. No Surgery. Just Real Relief.

Here's what patients experience:

- Breathe freely through your nose, often after just one session
- Wake up refreshed without snoring or sleep interruptions
- Eliminate sinus pressure and chronic headaches
- Stop relying on medications and nasal sprays
- Avoid risky surgeries and lengthy recoveries

Results Across Generations

I'm Dr. Siegfried, protégé of Dr. Stober who developed this technique. I've used it successfully for over 40 years on patients from infants to 98-year-olds, including professional athletes and even my own son (who went from a difficult birth to pitching for the Chicago Cubs).

Dedicated to your health and wellness,
