"smooth as HONEY...aged in WOOD"

Honeywood Winery is Oregon's Oldest Producing Winery starting the day after prohibition ended. In 1933, Honeywood Winery was founded by Ron Honeyman and John Wood and produced fruit brandies, cordials and liqueurs. Contrary to the obvious, Messrs. Honeyman and Wood did not use a contraction of their names to make Honeywood, and in fact, objected to the name on those grounds. An advertising consultant provided the rationale with a line from Oliver Goldsmith's play, "The Good Natured Man," wherin the products of fermentation were referred to as, "smooth as HONEY… aged in WOOD…the drink of the good natured man." Honeywood became synonymous with the elite in wines.

A winery must be close to its source of ingredients, and so it is with Honeywood. Located in Salem, in the heart of Oregon's great and fertile Willamette Valley, the winery is minutes away from some of the world's finest vineyards, cane berry fields and fruit orchards. Honeywood is the oldest producing winery in Oregon. The winery produces a full line of premium vinifera wines and the most extensive listing of premium fruit and specialty wines. We offer complimentary tasting daily, fun wine tasting events every 3rd Friday of the month from 5-7pm., wine club discounts and events. Come visit us!

A Year to Remember

REFLECTING ON 2018'S HEADLINES, HEADLINERS

Welcome to the 2019 Oregon Wine Almanac, an annual publication of the Oregon Wine Press.

We feel wrapping up the previous year and taking a headcount (see Oregon Wine Directory, pages 41–77) is important. It's also interesting to look back at the year and reflect.

And, so, we did.

First, you'll find the ever-important annual numbers report (page 12) showing the impressive growth of our industry. According to the 2017 survey, 769 wineries now call Oregon home alongside 1,144 vineyards.

In 2018, we said goodbye to loved ones taken before their time. In Oregon's tight-knit wine community, our hearts continue to mourn the loss of three amazing people: Stephen Cary, Liz Chambers and Jesús Guillén (page 14). May their legacies continue and the many memories offer great comfort.

Along with the sadness, there was great joy, too. The Evenstads of Domaine Serene made headlines in 2018 with their multi-million-dollar commitment to Linfield College (page 16), helping ensure the success of wine career-minded students who will, no doubt, enrich and strengthen the industry.

Last year was a prosperous time as well, with many grand openings (page 18), including the Atticus, a four-story stunning hotel in downtown McMinnville and a boom of wine bars in Portland. The real estate market remained vigorous, too (page 20). The most interesting of sales being Vista Hills' vineyard to The Family Coppola — hello, Hollywood.

New Willamette Valley AVAs were also a hot topic (page 22). Four remain in process, while the Van Duzer Corridor was approved right before the end of the year. Congratulations to the folks who made it happen.

Perhaps the biggest headlines belonged to the Copper Cane controversy (page 28), a story that still continues. Stay tuned.

Among a few other articles, you'll find the Almanac's main feature, the OWP Person of 2018: Rudy Marchesi of Montinore Estate (page 34). His dedication to Biodynamics and its proliferation earned him the accolade.

And so, cheers to Rudy and thanks for reading OWP. Here's to another prosperous year.

INDUSTRY CENSUS OFFERS LATEST STATS

BY OWP STAFF

In mid-September of 2018, the Oregon Wine Board released its Oregon Vineyard and Winery Report indicating significant gains within many sectors of the industry. The annual study, conducted by the University of Oregon's Institute for Policy Research and Engagement (IPRE), reported a gain of 44 wineries last year, compared to 24 in 2016. Grapegrowers flourished in 2017, as well, experiencing an increase from 1,052 vineyards to 1,144. The most striking growth was found in emerging wine regions along the northern border, where 18 wineries opened last year, and the Rogue Valley, boasting 13 new wineries in this Southern Oregon AVA.

Buoyed by increases in direct and wholesale markets, sales swelled to $550 million in 2017, an increase of almost 4 percent from the prior year's $529 million. Total value of production rose 14 percent, from $167 million to $192 million in 2017. The report also confirmed that the northern Willamette Valley continues to dominate the state with 73 percent of total tons crushed.

This year's study showed growth in production, echoing greater national demand for Oregon wine, as reported by Nielsen. Retail wine sales of Oregon wine for 52 weeks ending Aug. 11, 2018, rose 16 percent, compared to the wine category's growth of 1.6 percent overall. Regarding varieties, Oregon Chardonnay trended up 10 percent in a flat segment and Oregon Pinot Noir volume rose 17 percent in a sector growing just 2 percent.

Over the past three years, planted acreage increased from 28,034 to 33,631 in 2017, representing a record jump of more than 17 percent. Increases in yields occurred with Cabernet Franc, Chardonnay, Pinot Blanc and Pinot Noir; decreases included Cabernet Sauvignon, Merlot, Pinot Gris and Syrah.

"The global wine market is fiercely competitive, and these data suggest Oregon is well-positioned with increasing supply generally balanced by surging consumer demand," says Tom Danowski, Oregon Wine Board executive director. "We continue to see the marketplace recognizing quality and Oregon delivering it more consistently across more grape varieties and growing regions than ever."

One of the charges of the Oregon Wine Board is to help stimulate interest in Oregon wines outside the state; beyond domestic consumption, last year's exports showed strong internationally with overall exports of 94,351 cases, returning to levels last seen in 2014. Canadians represent the top international consumers of premium Oregon wines, with 49 percent of exported Oregon wine heading north. Japanese consumers bought 26 percent more Oregon wine compared to 2016, with imports increasing from 6,592 to 8,952 cases in 2017.

CELEBRATING THOSE WE LOST TOO SOON

STEPHEN CARY

BY OWP STAFF

Stephen Cary, longtime winemaker at Yamhill Valley Vineyards, died peacefully April 28, 2018 in Portland. He was 71.

Before wine, Cary served in the U.S. Navy as an aviation officer. Following a tour in Vietnam, he says, in an Oregon Wine History Archive 2015 interview conducted by Rich Schmidt of Linfield College, he "grew disillusioned during that time with the all-consuming aspect of American culture."

Cary continued, "I decided that when I got out of the Navy, I didn't want have a normal nine-to-five American job that was intended simply to accumulate wealth. So, I went looking for something more interesting, and I found wine."

He worked as a wine steward at Sunriver Lodge, followed by similar jobs in California and Colorado before returning to his native state of Oregon, where he worked eight years for distributor Henny-Hinsdale in Salem With advice from his friend, Bill Nelson, Cary started his own business, Cary Oregon Wines, with the goal of marketing Oregon wine outside state lines.

Cary was one of the original coordinators of the Steamboat Pinot Noir Conference. The annual symposium brings together Pinot Noir producers from California and Oregon with the goal of making great Pinot Noir. Now in its 40th year, it has grown to include producers from around the world.

From Cary's Linfield interview, "[The early days were] a remarkable time in our industry, realizing that the giant next door called California was going to eat us alive if we didn't do things like band together and learn how to make Pinot Noir in a hurry, share our knowledge, share our experiences. All of that was critical in the early days of this business."

In 1984, Yamhill Valley Vineyards' presented its 1983 Pinot Noir at Steamboat. The next year, Cary Oregon Wines began representing the winery.

He was particularly passionate about Oregon Pinot Noir and felt frustrated by the perceived disrespect for the wines in the wider market. He suggested a

LIZ CHAMBERS

BY OWP STAFF

Beloved winery owner Elizabeth "Liz" Chambers died of natural causes Feb. 1, at the age of 56. She was on a personal trip in the Bahamas at the time.

After graduating from the University of Oregon with a degree in finance, Liz worked for Chubb Insurance Company. Her mother, Carolyn Chambers, was a prominent business person and pioneer in television — she established Chambers Communications Corporation, Oregon's first ABC television affiliate in 1959. Liz's adoptive father, Dick Chambers, owned a construction company.

In 1991, Hinman Vineyards founder Doyle Hinman approached Carolyn with a proposal to invest in his Eugene brand started in 1979. After much discussion, she purchased 80-percent of the 25-acre winery. In the meantime, Carolyn hired a consulting firm that advised her to purchase the winery outright.

In a 2016 interview conducted by the Linfield College Archives, Liz explains more about the transition. "[They said] you need to buy Doyle out the rest of the way, and you need a family member to run the winery and be the face of the winery."

In 1993, Carolyn asked her daughter to fill that position; Liz, in her early 30s at the time, accepted the challenge.

"For about a few months it was really fun, because I didn't know what I didn't know," Liz continued in her Linfield interview. "And then I realized I didn't know anything, and it was a very steep learning curve."

At first, Liz struggled but soon flourished at Silvan Ridge, the winery's new moniker upon acquisition; Carolyn's maiden with the 2017 vintage.

With an exceptional production staff in place, Liz worked markets, selling both brands.

"You're in a city you don't know, riding in the car with representatives from the distributors and [other] accounts," Liz explained during her Linfield Archives interview. "But when you pour the wine and people say, 'Wow, that's good.' It's so rewarding. And I think people like my story. It sort of resonates with people. It's like, 'Nope. I'm not going to give up. I'm going to keep doing this. I'm going to make it work.'"

"Liz impacted me professionally and personally in so many different ways," said winemaker JP Valot. "She hired me as an assistant winemaker for Silvan Ridge Winery back in 2005, right when I was starting my career in Oregon. All these years, she supported my development and growth. Liz believed in my potential and promoted me to head winemaker in 2012. I always felt she trusted my work, and, with her full support, I became the director of winemaking for Silvan Ridge and Elizabeth Chambers Cellar [starting with the 2017 vintage].

"At a personal level, Liz will always be an example to follow," Valot continued. "Liz cared for the ones close to her and was always supportive of our dreams. She was the first one to support my family label. For her, family was a priority, and she treated her employees like family.

"In every decision Liz made, the well-being of everyone involved was considered. I can't talk about my career without talking about Liz because through all these years, she trusted me, helped and let me grow."

name, Silva, translates to "forest" in Latin — fitting for the tree-lined estate.

In 2005, the Chambers family was approached to buy another winery, Panther Creek Cellars, founded in 1986 by Ken Wright in McMinnville. They bought the brand from then-owners Ron and Linda Kaplan, and eventually the building, too.

Two years after her mother's death in 2011, Liz and her siblings sold Panther Creek to Bacchus Capital Management, but Liz retained the historic building — Oregon Wine Press published a story about its renovation in last month's edition. With a stunning space and the help of Panther Creek's former winemaker, Michael Stevenson, she created Elizabeth Chambers Cellar. Silvan Ridge winemaker JP Valot assumed winemaking at the namesake winery, starting

JESÚS GUILLÉN

BY NEAL HULKOWER

Celebrated winemaker Jesús Guillén died Nov. 5, 2018, following a brief battle with an aggressive cancer. He was 38. His final illness struck as he was cleaning barrels in preparation for the 2018 harvest, one which he would not complete. Hospitalized in Portland in early October, he never returned home.

After earning a degree in computer systems engineering at Universidad Autónoma de Chihuahua, Mexico, Guillén came to Oregon in 2002 to learn English, joining his father, Jesús Guillén Sr., who was working in the vineyard at White Rose Estate. He had no knowledge of or even much interest in wine. When he began tasting, he was struck by the memories the aromas evoked, a walk in the forest or the floral scents of his grandparents' garden. He named two 1999 vintage Pinot Noirs his epiphany wines: Archery Summit Arcus Estate and Elizabeth's Reserve from Adelsheim.

Guillén started working with his father in the vineyards and eventually moved to the cellar. Not formally trained, he read every book he could about winemaking, talked to winemakers and was mentored by Mark Vlossak of St. Innocent, who was consulting at White Rose. Six years later, he became the head winemaker for White Rose Estate and was building his own brand, Guillén Family Wines. During an interview on June 25, 2018, for the Oregon Wine History Archive at Linfield College, Guillén explained the stylistic differences between the two labels. For White Rose, "the goal is to portray the classic attributes for Pinot Noir

EVENSTADS GIFT MILLIONS TO LINFIELD PROGRAM

BY OWP STAFFF

In March 2018, Domaine Serene Winery founders Grace and Ken Evenstad pledged $6 million to Linfield College, the largest gift in Oregon history in support of wine education. The donation is also one of the largest in Linfield's history. It will allow the college to significantly expand its wine education program, which already offers the first interdisciplinary liberal arts bachelor's degree in wine studies in the U.S.

The gift will endow the Grace and Ken Evenstad Center for Wine Education at Linfield, as well as an endowed faculty position, the Evenstad Chair in Wine Studies. It also will fund the design and construction of the Evenstad Wine Laboratory as part of a new science building under development on the college's McMinnville campus.

Traditional viticulture and enology programs focus primarily or exclusively on the craft of growing grapes and making wine. In contrast, the Grace and Ken Evenstad Center for Wine Education will include a wine studies degree incorporating the historical, geographical and environmental aspects of growing grapes and the making, bottling and selling of wine, as well as coursework on sensory-evaluation techniques and industry-specific communication issues.

"Ken and I were drawn to the fact that this new and unique program will focus on all aspects of running a successful and sustainable wine business," said Grace Evenstad. "In our opinion, the real benefit is that it focuses on building a high level of quality throughout the entire business of wine — in winemaking, management, accounting, sales, marketing, etc. This gift will enable thousands of future students to follow their passions in the wine business. It will prepare them for success, enabling the American wine industry to benefit for generations, even centuries, to come."

Linfield currently offers a wine studies minor that can be paired with other academic programs, and is in the process of developing an independent major. The Center for Wine Education at Linfield also offers online wine management and wine marketing certificates, holds a wine lecture series, provides a summer Wine Industry Immersion Program and hosts one of the world's premier wine events, the International Pinot Noir Celebration, each summer. The Oregon Wine History Archive is housed at Linfield.

"This tremendous gift is not only a boon to Linfield College, it's a major investment in the future of wine education in our state," said Linfield College President Thomas Hellie. "We are deeply grateful to Grace and Ken for this important gift—and we're proud of their faith in Linfield's wine education program."

In June 2017, the Center for Wine Education named internationally known wine climatologist Greg Jones as its new director. Jones will become the first to hold the Evenstad Chair in Wine Studies title.

"It is such an honor for Linfield College and myself to be recognized and supported by the Evenstads," said Jones. "Through their generosity and vision, Linfield will be able to

WILLAMETTE WINEGROWERS PROPOSE FIVE NEW AVAS

BY MICHAEL ALBERTY

Officially recognized by the federal Alcohol and Tobacco Tax and Trade Bureau (TTB), an AVA (American Viticultural Area) is a grapegrowing area distinct from its neighbors. When a group of winery and vineyard owners within an existing AVA decide their patch of land is sufficiently unique to merit recognition, they apply for sub-AVA status.

More than a decade ago, winegrowers in six areas within the Willamette Valley, the largest AVA in the state, earned TTB approval of their AVA petitions, including Yamhill-Carlton, Dundee Hills, McMinnville, Ribbon Ridge, Eola-Amity Hills and Chehalem Mountains.

The following five awaited approval in 2018. While Lower Long Tom, Tualatin Hills, Laurelwood, and Mount Pisgah, Polk County still wait (as of publication date Dec. 27, 2018), Van Duzer Corridor was approved Dec. 14, 2018.

The AVA creation process begins by filing a petition with the TTB, explaining how an area's climate, soil types and geology are unique. Proposed boundaries must be justified and the AVA name recognizable to the local community and/or government agencies.

If the TTB decides the petition passes muster, they declare it "perfected" and post it in the Federal Register. The public is then invited to comment about the proposal, after which the TTB will ask for additional opinions, propose modifications or submit a final ruling to the Federal Register announcing its adoption. This process typically takes two to three years.

● VAN DUZER CORRIDOR

This AVA proposal (now approved) is a testament to perseverance. The petition was delayed once by lack of supporting documentation for the original proposed name, and again by incoming President Trump's freeze on new federal regulations. The petition was finally put up for public comments in April 2018, seven years after it was drafted.

The Van Duzer Corridor AVA is 20 miles northwest of Salem, with rolling hills stretching across 60,000 acres. The soil is marine sedimentary with some basalt over siltstone bedrock. While these soils remain unique to the area and impact both grapes and wine, the fortunes of this AVA rest with the wind.

"When the Eola-Amity Hills folks got their AVA, we were miffed," Havlin confessed. "They were bragging about their Van Duzer Corridor winds, and I'm thinking to myself, you don't know what Van Duzer winds are until you're on our side of the Eola Hills."

Havlin observes how plants respond to the hefty winds and cooler evening temperatures by developing thicker skins. He explains, "The skins are where all the good stuff is. Those skins are why we get a darker, richer Pinot Noir." Cooler evening temperatures also preserve the fruit's acidity, helping balance the tannins generated by thicker-skinned grapes.

Wineries in the Van Duzer Corridor AVA include: Johan Vineyards, Chateau Bianca, Namasté Vineyards, Firesteed Cellars, Andante Vineyard, Left Coast Cellars and Van Duzer Vineyards. The AVA also has 17 commercial vineyards, with 1,000 acres of grapes planted to everything from Pinot Noir to Zweigelt. The number of vineyards will increase as Bjørnson Vineyard and California winemaker Ehren Jordan complete new projects.

✱ MOUNT PISGAH, POLK COUNTY

When a small group of winemakers discovered Jackson Family Wines was considering helping create a giant new sub-AVA in the southern Willamette Valley, they decided to launch a preemptive strike and create a smaller one of their own. If successful, their proposed Mount Pisgah, Polk County AVA will be the southernmost AVA in the Willamette Valley.

The AVA covers 5,850 acres, 15 miles west of Salem and home to 10 commercial vineyards, including Freedom Hill, and two bonded wineries: Amalie Roberts Estate and Illahe Vineyards. Mount Pisgah, named by settlers in the 1800s in honor of a hill back home in Missouri, has 531 acres of vines — mostly Pinot Noir, Pinot Gris and Chardonnay — planted from 260 to 835 feet in elevation.

Mount Pisgah features a shallow layer of marine sedimentary soils perched on top of the oldest rocks in the Willamette Valley, Siletz River volcanics. This soil combination exists nowhere else in the valley and contributes to a distinct mineral note in the area's red wines.

Equally important are the colder temperatures at Mount Pisgah's higher elevations. These readings are significantly lower than the central and northern Willamette Valley, helping create wines with a lighter touch and elevated acidity.

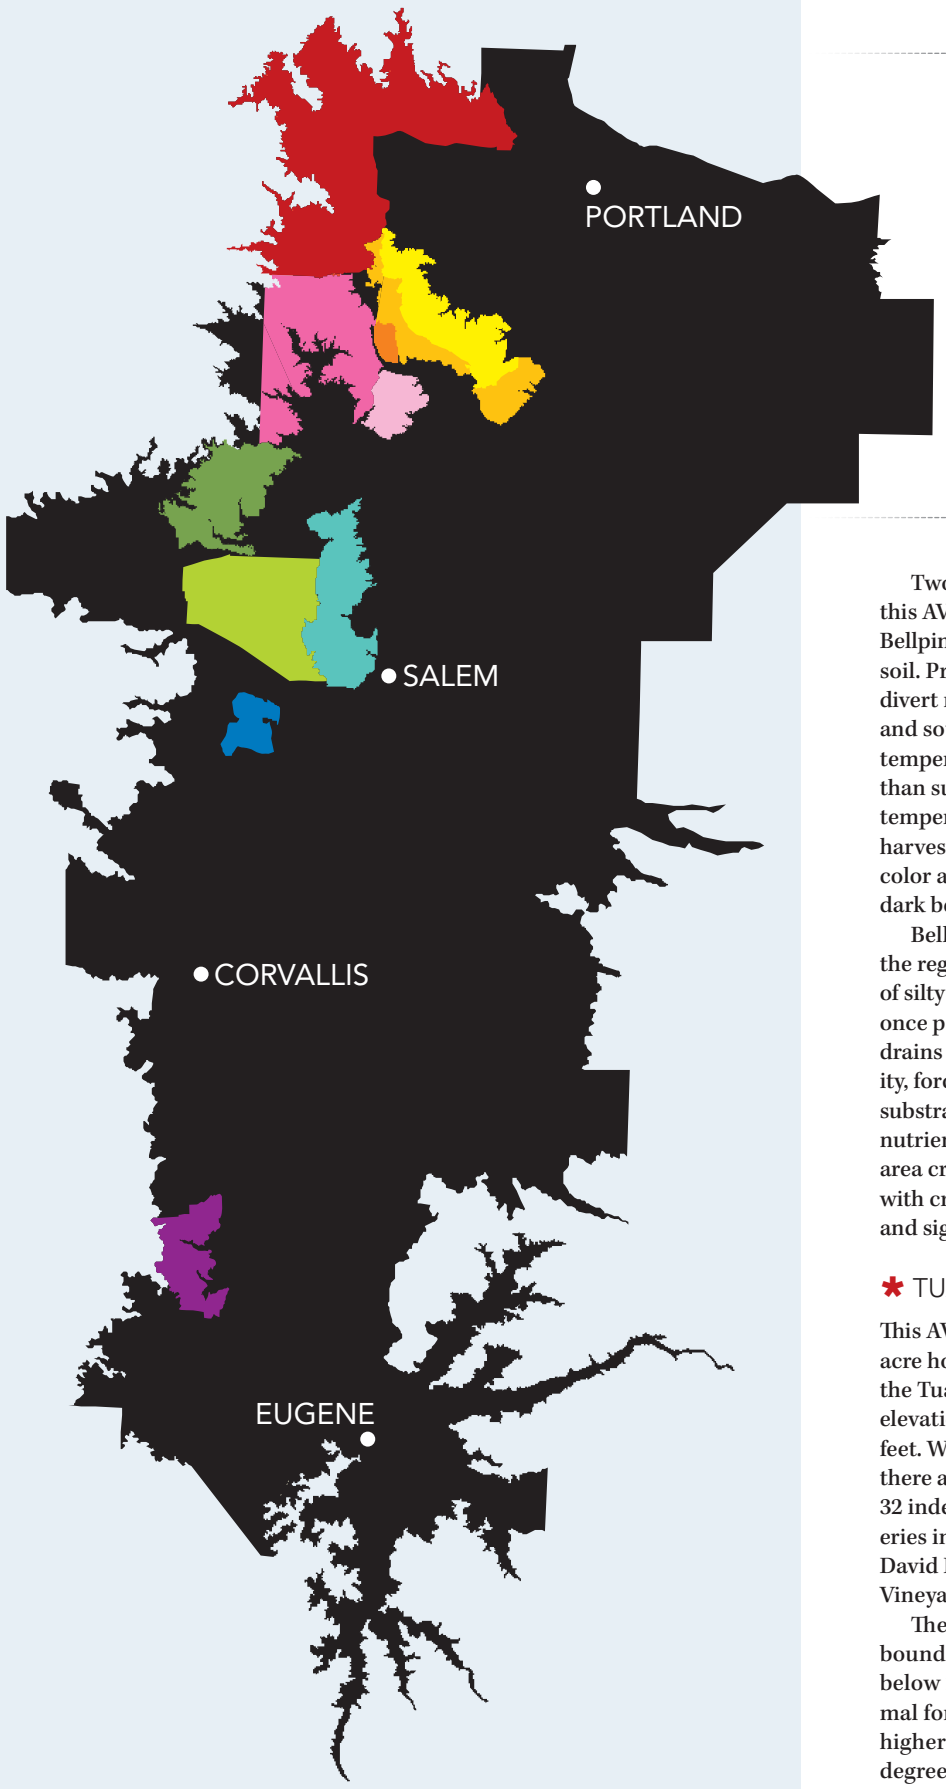

The Mount Pisgah folks have a different take on wind compared with their colleagues to the north: Less is more. On Mount Pisgah, vineyards are buffered from winds and extreme temperatures, creating what Brad Ford of Illahe describes as a "calm, protected climate." The information provided in the petition praises reduced wind speeds for minimizing damage to young vines, optimal fruit ripening and avoiding desiccated grapes during harvest.

When I asked Ford about the hundreds of hours invested in this project, he replied: "I just hope federal recognition will make more consumers aware of all the great wines coming off this small mountain in Polk County."

✱ LOWER LONG TOM

High Pass Winery's owner Dieter Boehm chuckled when I asked him about the name of the Long Tom River, explaining it as the result of a misinterpretation of a Kalapuyan Indian tribal name, Lama Tun Buff. Too bad those original settlers misunderstood it because Lama Tun Buff translates to "spank-his-a%$," which would have made a fine name for an AVA.

Lower Long Tom AVA is located 20 miles south of Corvallis, with 25,000 acres curving along the western shore of the Long Tom River. The application shows 22 vineyards covering 500 acres and 10 bonded wineries, including Benton-Lane, Brigadoon Wine Co. and Antiquum Farm.

Two elements differentiate this AVA: Prairie Mountain and Bellpine marine sedimentary soil. Prairie Mountain's 3,000 feet divert maritime winds to the north and south, creating nighttime temperatures significantly warmer than surrounding areas. Higher temperatures translate to earlier harvests and Pinot Noir with deep color and earthy, concentrated dark berry flavors.

Bellpine soils exist throughout the region, forming a thin layer of silty clay loam over sandstone once part of an ancient seabed. It drains easily and has limited fertility, forcing vines deeper into the substrate for water and mineral nutrients. Many winemakers in the area credit those extensive roots with creating wines of complexity and significant tannic structure.

* TUALATIN HILLS

This AVA forms a massive 144,000-acre horseshoe shape defined by the Tualatin River watershed and elevations between 200 and 1,000 feet. Within the AVA's boundaries there are 860.5 acres of grapes and 32 independent growers and wineries including Montinore Estate, David Hill Vineyards, Apolloni Vineyards and others.

The reason for the elevation boundary results from conditions below 200 feet remain sub-optimal for grapegrowing; elevations higher than 1,000 feet have fewer degree growing days and a higher risk of frost. The 200- to 1,000-foot zone is also home to Laurelwood, a reddish-colored soil comprised of weathered volcanic basalt mixed with windblown silt, known as loess.

Laurelwood soils also contain tiny balls of iron manganese called pisolites. Portland State University geology professor Dr. Scott Burns argues the pisolites define the region's terroir by contributing complexity and rose petal qualities to Pinot Noir. Wines made with grapes grown in Laurelwood are also known for their bright, spicy berry flavors and an elegant texture Marchesi describes as "a more European style."

In addition to the soil and elevations, the Tualatin Hills AVA lies due east of one of the highest points in the Oregon Coast Range. This location creates a rain shadow effect resulting in lower rainfall totals than surrounding areas. Being less than 50 miles from that range also means chilly maritime winds drop the nighttime temperatures during growing season nearly 4 degrees lower than nearby Portland. The significant day-to-night temperature swings allow for warm days to properly ripen grapes while cool evenings preserve acidity.

* LAURELWOOD

This AVA in the southern foothills of the Tualatin Valley may only be 33,600 acres, but it packs in more than 70 vineyards and 975 acres of grapes. Their list of 25 wineries, including Ponzi Vineyards, Dion

Copper Cane Controversy

BATTLING THE MISUSE OF AVAS ON CALI-MADE OREGON PINOT

BY JIM GULLO

In February of 2018, Jim Bernau, founder and principal owner of Willamette Valley Vineyards, was notified that a label for a wine called the Willametter Journal had been approved by the federal TTB. Produced by California's Copper Cane, and made and bottled in Rutherford, California, the wine's fanciful label described its source "from the Willamette region of Oregon's coastal range." The back label claimed the grapes' origins as the "Territory of Oregon." On the COLA application, the word "Willamette" was in black and blended in with the rest of the copy.

But when the wine appeared on the store shelves of the Total Wine retail chain a few months later, the word "Willamette" on the label was printed in bright red, leaping off the paper and suggesting to consumers this was an Oregon Pinot Noir from the broad Willamette Valley AVA. Why was it a threat? The branding represented a heightened degree of misrepresentation of Oregon's AVAs by Copper Cane. Another of its brands called Elouan, which also claims to be an Oregon wine, is a huge seller by Oregon standards — reported to be more than 100,000 cases a year, an astronomical number compared to the 3,000- to 5,000-case outputs of most Oregon wineries. Also made in California, Elouan's case boxes show the outline of an Oregon map, illegally stating the multiple AVAs of the Willamette, Umpqua and Rogue valleys and falsely shown as nested in a larger geographic designation, "Oregon Coast." The 2017 Elouan Oregon Pinot Noir label, recently surrendered at the request of the TTB, stated the same on the label. "Purely Oregon, Always Coastal" is its bewildering tagline — the TTB has also recently required "Purely Oregon" be removed.

The highest-selling Oregon Pinot Noirs — in a $17 and higher category — were not only NOT from an Oregon producer, but it was questionable whether they were even made entirely from Oregon grapes or made under Oregon AVA rules.

Bernau knew it had to be challenged, calling Copper Cane's misstep as "the greatest threat we have faced in the history of the Oregon wine industry." And so, he did.

> "OREGON WINEMAKERS WELCOME NEWCOMERS WITH KINDNESS BUT ASK FOR LAWFUL AND RESPECTFUL CONDUCT IN RETURN." JIM BERNAU

He called Joe Wagner, the 36-year-old Copper Cane founder and winemaker of Willametter Journal and Elouan. Both wines broadly suggested being sourced from official Oregon AVAs — which would carry restrictions on grape sources and winemaking — without actually claiming the AVA sourcing. It was a big-business, big-marketing obfuscation — "a deliberate con" as Bernau put it — that nobody in Oregon would ever dare to attempt.

Bernau informed Wagner that his California company was illegally using Oregon AVAs and infringing on his longstanding trademark for Willamette Valley Vineyards, a publicly traded company with 16,500 owners. "He said that he takes intellectual property seriously. And he wanted to send me some wine," recalled Bernau. "I said that we're not going to change our posture, and he had to withdraw the wine or change the label."

A few months passed, and when they spoke again in July, Bernau reiterated his position. Wagner promised to discuss the matter further and offered to send more wine. Two weeks later, Bernau was informed Copper Cane had filed a petition to rescind Willamette Valley Vineyard's nearly 40-year trademark — the petition is still under review as of the Oregon Wine Almanac's publication date of Jan. 1. Wagner claimed "Willamette Valley," in general, and "Willamette," in particular, were now generic terms describing a winemaking region and no longer worthy of a trademark.

"Oh yes, we did that," said Wagner in a recent interview. "He got very aggressive with us, and the trademark challenge was our counter back to him. We've been facing an all-out attack on our brand and our company. Jim Bernau just wants to keep the Willamette Valley name to himself." Wagner says it would put Copper Cane at an unfair disadvantage to not be allowed to name the regional source of his fruit on his bottles. He insists the wines in question were fully compliant with Oregon fruit-sourcing regulations.

Bernau sought other remedies with the help of his friend David Gomberg, an Oregon legislator who publicly ridiculed Copper Cane's fanciful claims of sourcing grapes from the coast — where no grapes grow nor vineyards exist. With the help of Oregon's congressional delegation, led by Senators Ron Wyden and Jeff Merkley, the TTB was petitioned to review Copper Cane's Oregon labels.

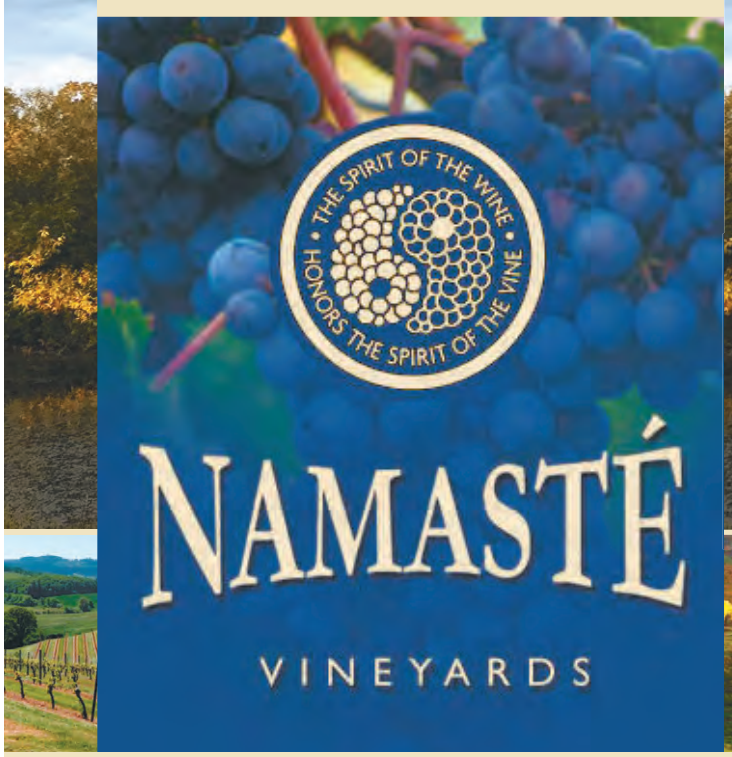

In November of 2018, the TTB revoked the labels of nine Elouan brands, pointing to inappropriate uses of AVA names and references. Later that month, Oregon's OLCC began a proceeding to ban the sales of Elouan and Willamette Journal wines in the state due to numerous violations of its rules on use of AVA names. Copper Cane has appealed the decision.

The appeal only made the war of words heat up. Wagner blasted Bernau and Gomberg in the press, claiming they were trying to eliminate his competition in the marketplace. Bernau fired back. In the December edition of Oregon Wine Press, Bernau responded, "In his effort to profit from the equity others have built, [Wagner's actions] would destroy the AVA system. We believe in the value of these geographic pedigrees, and the reputational equity winemakers and growers have created in them … The Oregon wine industry has grown through collaboration and respectful treatment of its colleagues. Oregon winemakers welcome newcomers with kindness but ask for lawful and respectful conduct in return."

A million-plus bottles of California-made Oregon Pinot Noir say otherwise. Stay tuned for an interesting battle over the use of the Willamette Valley name, and a reputation for fine Pinot

Refining Wine

ONE SCIENTIFIC STUDY AT A TIME

BY MAUREEN BATTISTELLA

It takes both skill and craft to tend a vineyard and to tease a beautiful wine out of the barrel. Yet, exceptional wines also require science. Oregon's agricultural scientists — viticulturists, entomologists, virologists, pathologists, enologists — balance short-term priorities with long-term needs to develop a robust research agenda needed to address the critical problems growers and winemakers experience in the field and cellar, today and in the future.

This past year, Grapevine Red Blotch Virus and the effects of wildfire smoke represented two of the most-concerning subjects researched in 2018.

A relatively new blight in Oregon, red blotch may cause underripe fruit and reduced crop loads. There are still many questions about the disease, according to Dr. Robert Martin, research lead and virologist with the Agricultural Research Service Horticulture Unit of the USDA: How does it impact the plants? How does it impact the fruit? And, most importantly, how does it move? Are there things the growers can do to mitigate the virus?

"We have a multidisciplinary red blotch study that involves viticulture, virology, entomology and enology," added Mark Chien, program coordinator of the Oregon Wine Research Institute (OWRI) at Oregon State University (OSU). "We came up with a project plan and did a lot of research in the Willamette Valley this summer. It's a difficult virus to pin down, to understand not only the virus itself but its vectors and hosts as well."

Domaine Serene accelerated red blotch research in 2018 with a gift of $500,000 to OWRI, which, if matched by industry contributions, will support a $1 million funding pool. OWRI faculty members are already working on the problem thanks to a 2017 USDA Specialty Crops Block Grant of $174,936 through the Oregon Department of Agriculture (ODA), in addition to a 2018 grant of $73,500 from the American Vineyard Foundation. The Oregon Wine Board (OWB) has also funded red blotch research. OSU Southern Oregon Research and Extension Center viticulturist Dr. Alexander Levin has served as principal investigator on these projects, bringing water stress, irrigation management and the effects of climate change into the complex study.

ABOVE: OSU and OWRI viticulturist Patty Skinkis leads students through a Willamette Valley commercial vineyard, where she is engaged in the seventh year of her fruit-drop study. BELOW: OSU and OWRI entomology researcher Rick Hilton examines soil for insect activity.

Red blotch represents a fine example of how scientists from many disciplines work together to solve problems. Smoke taint is another, and, in 2018, OSU formed a collaborative team led by James Osborne, OSU's wine microbiologist, and Elizabeth Tomasino, a sensory analyst. Oregon scientists are also working in collaboration with USDA-Agricultural Research Services (ARS), and faculty at the University of California, Davis and Washington State University, where nearby vineyards have also been subject to intrusive smoke.

Other research abounds, including longer-term projects studying powdery mildew and fungal resistance, plant nutrition, water stress, crop loads and characterizing sensory qualities of Pinot Noir terroir. USDA-ARS plant physiologist Dr. Paul Schreiner continues his research on nutritional requirements for Pinot Noir. The findings from this multiyear study reduce the cost of inputs, protect the environment and improve grapevine productivity

OREGON'S BELOVED BIODYNAMIC MENTOR

Story by Jade Helm Photos by Andrea Johnson

Some people regard Rudy Marchesi, president and chief viticulturist at Montinore Estate, as an artisan. A fair descriptor though this is not the core of his success. Exceptional practicality and results-oriented thinking with a healthy dose of curiosity and generosity remain his foundation, leading to a career of constant learning and, now, influence on an international level, thanks to Biodynamic methodology.

Created by philosopher and scientist Dr. Rudolf Steiner, who first explained it in a series of agriculture lectures in 1924, Biodynamics was new to Marchesi in 1979, when a college friend came to help him with his new vineyard. "He had spent several months working on the Findhorn Farm in Scotland where they had pioneered Biodynamic farming in that area. His stories of the practices, the composts and the remarkable vegetables all were inspiring," Marchesi explained.

Wine, on the other hand, has always been a part of his life. In fact, his grandparents, Carlo and Rosa Marchesi, cultivated a love of the land, growing and producing their own food, including grapes and wine in Northern Italy. After immigrating to the U.S., they continued this tradition all the while instilling this same passion for digging in the dirt — and making wine — in their grandson.

Marchesi's wine career began in the early '80s in the Northeast, making wine for his own small label while raising his daughters. But when his oldest daughter, an ambitious student, wanted to attend Reed College in Portland, he had to add another "hat" to raise enough funds. He noted, "This wasn't going to happen on a poor winemaker's income." So, he accepted a position with a wine distributor.

In turn, his palate broadened with exposure to fine European selections — he also got to visit his daughter in Oregon during work trips. Marchesi soon noticed his favorite French wines were made with Biodynamic practices. A longtime proponent of organic agriculture, his interests were piqued — so much so he eventually studied at the yearlong training course in Biodynamics at the Pfeiffer Center in New York.

An organization that practices, teaches and promotes Biodynamics, the Pfeiffer Center describes the farming as "an approach to plant and land care that combines novel techniques of building up healthy soil with a renewed awareness of all the forces at work in the farm organism: among and between the soil, plants, animals and humans, as well as the cosmos itself." Steiner created the method in response to farmers who were concerned about the declining health and vitality of their crops, plants and animals.

With the Reed tuition mission accomplished, Marchesi returned to working in wine production. Recognizing the potential in Oregon, he accepted a consultancy in Forest Grove at Montinore Estate in 1998. In 2003, he started Biodynamic trials on parts of the vineyard, including a particular anemic Pinot Noir block that looked good on paper but was not producing. After one season of Biodynamic treatments, the vines showed a "Charlie Brown Christmas" tree transformation, going from "spindly to healthy."

By 2006, all of Montinore's vines were being converted to Biodynamic farming. In 2008, Demeter USA, the nation's governing body for Biodynamic practices, certified both Montinore's vineyard and winery. No small feat.

Before this grand undertaking, Marchesi had worked with Biodynamic practices in small gardens and vineyards, but converting 240 acres of vines was another story. Doug Tunnell of Brick House Vineyards commented, "Rudy's professional contribution is clear. He has demonstrated Biodynamic agriculture is not just for small farmers but can be successfully accomplished on a large scale." In fact, Demeter USA recently reported that Montinore Estate is the country's largest producer of certified estate wines made from Biodynamic grapes.

Marchesi admits conversion was a challenge, but he continued to find motivation in the wine. "Over the first five years, character manifested in the wine like we had never seen before," he explained, adding that this was the result of the vineyard being healthy enough to express itself. Marchesi also noticed a positive cumulative effect the longer he farmed the land using Steiner's methods.

With such great success, he wanted to engender the Biodynamic movement, but Marchesi quickly discovered accessible information and a forum for farmers were nowhere to be found. Yet, he saw the potential value in such a community that shared experiences and learned from one another. "It is good to stick together and share with your neighbors. That makes us better farmers," he said.

Marchesi joined a small group of winemakers in those early years, including Tunnell, Mike Etzel of Beaux Frères, Gilles de Domingo of Cooper Mountain and others. Kevin Chambers, managing director of Koosah Farm noted, "Rudy brings a love of learning to all of his pursuits. It is evident in his endeavors to grow better grapes and in the enthusiasm in which he coalesces people to talk and learn."

Since 2006, Marchesi has been hosting Biodynamic educational events at Montinore. In 2017, more than 50 vintners from Oregon and Washington gathered for such a forum. Speakers included Mac Mead, director of the Pfeiffer Center; Jim Fullmer, then co-director of Demeter USA; and keynote speaker Adriano Zago, a European Biodynamic consultant from Italy. Bill Sweat of Winderlea in the Dundee Hills views these meetings as an example of Marchesi's generosity of spirit. "It would have been so much easier for Rudy to spend two days alone with Adriano. Instead, he put forth the effort to bring a group of winemakers together so we could all benefit."

Marchesi's contributions to Biodynamic wine education range from neighborly to global in scale. For example, the Biodynamic Association's annual conference was held in Portland in 2018, and Marchesi took the opportunity to bring people together for intensive learning at a pre-conference Biodynamic winemaking seminar at Montinore. Speakers included Zago, plus other experts such as Nicoletta Dicova, an Italian wine journalist and communicator who researches natural wine; Stephen Webber, Montinore head winemaker; and Dan Rinke, vineyard manager and winemaker at Johan Vineyards. In addition to speaking at Montinore, Marchesi frequently represents Biodynamic winegrowers at informational events like Oregon Pinot Camp.

Most recently, Marchesi was one of nine growers — and the only American — asked to join the International Biodynamic Viticulture Group. This new committee will endeavor to integrate more viticulture into the annual Biodynamic Agriculture Conference held in Dornach, Switzerland, and to create a web-based forum for exchange of information among the world's Biodynamic winegrowers.

And yet, according to Sweat, "Despite the additional demands on his time, Rudy will still take time to share ideas over a beer."

This sentiment is testament to why Marchesi has been selected as the Oregon Wine Press Person of the Year for 2018. For his work in Biodynamics and its advocacy, and, more importantly, for his generosity of spirit, OWP is pleased to honor him.

True to form, with modesty and practical application, Marchesi responded after learning of the award, "I am shocked and humbled. Most significantly, I appreciate that this honor may impart more validity and recognition to Biodynamic viticulture."

- ★ Description: Pet-friendly Coast House Rental. Just 35 miles west of the vineyards of Yamhill County is the tiny ocean-side village of Tierra del Mar. Miles from busy Hwy 101 and located along 40-mile Three Capes Scenic Drive, this is a glimpse into the Oregon Coast of the old days: miles of secluded beach with only dune grass and mountains in sight, mostly accessible only by foot or horseback, no commercial establishments. A walk in either direction leads to the beautiful estuary of Sitka Sedge Natural Area or the rarely visited north side of majestic Cape Kiwanda.
- ✱ Amenities: Just 375 feet from the beach, our extensively remodeled house has a stunning view through floor-to-ceiling windows into native Sitka spruce and hemlock forest just a few feet away. Roomy well-equipped kitchen, wrap-around juniper deck, hardwood interiors, skylights, vaulted ceilings. Photos & details online.

blind comparative tasting between 1983 vintages from Burgundy and Oregon.

The Oregon-Burgundy Challenge, conducted in 1985 at the International Wine Center in New York City, asked judges to identify the origin of each wine and select their three favorites. The panel of 25 could not correctly identify the source of at least half. Oregon wines placed first, second, third and tied for fourth and fifth, with Yamhill Valley Vineyards winning first, followed by Sokol Blosser, Adelsheim, Eyrie and Knudsen Erath. In this event, and a second competition two years later — Oregon, again, placed first, second and tied for third — Oregon wines earned global respect.

Yamhill Valley Vineyards owners Denis Burger and David Hinrichs approached Cary with the winemaker position. He accepted the challenge.

"I had been making wine for eight years at that time as an amateur, but a very serious amateur — three-French-oak-barrels-in-my-basement kind of amateur," he continued in the Linfield interview. "So, I came here in '91 as the winemaker-in-training, and after a couple of weeks, Denis said, 'Well, Stephen, you know how to make wine. You just don't know how to run the press and the pumps and all the big equipment, so here's how you do that,' and he was gone."

Cary led winemaking at Yamhill Valley Vineyards until 2016. During his 33 years as an associate of the winery, he dedicated his time and talent to perfecting his craft while studying the terroir.

Again, from the Linfield interview, "I like the whole idea that the vintages are gonna be different, and it's a chess match to figure out if we can put our experience and intellect to work and come up with the best expression of this place."

During his retirement, assuming the role of winemaker emeritus, Cary continued to assist and advise the winemaking team; in 2017, his last harvest, seated in his regular position on the forklift, he coordinated the arrival of the fruit on the crush pad, clearly energized by being part of another vintage.

provide a unique, liberal arts education in wine studies that will help develop future leaders of the Oregon wine industry. In addition, the Grace and Ken Evenstad Center for Wine Education will deliver numerous activities that will engage and educate the wine industry and community, enriching the Oregon wine experience for everyone."

The Evenstads and Linfield share a goal of helping support Oregon's wine industry as it develops into one of the world's premier grapegrowing and wine-producing destinations.

"From the first day that we set foot in the Dundee Hills, we have been on a neverending quest to grow and produce the finest Pinot Noir and Chardonnay in the world," said Ken Evenstad. "By making this donation to Linfield College, we are investing in the future thought-leaders of the global wine industry. With this partnership, it is our hope that the newly endowed wine studies program acts as a magnet to attract the brightest minds from around the world to further propel our industry to even greater heights on the world's stage."

Charitable giving remains an essential part of the fabric making up the culture at Domaine Serene and the legacy of Grace and Ken Evenstad. With the Linfield gift, the Evenstads have now donated or raised more than $20 million for philanthropic causes nationwide.

Grace and Ken Evenstad founded Domaine Serene in the Dundee Hills of Oregon in 1989. For the past 29 years, Domaine Serene, under the guidance of the Evenstads, has been focused on excellence in a perpetual quest to produce world-class Pinot Noir and Chardonnay. Domaine Serene's wines represent the achievement possible in Oregon, one of the finest regions in the world for Pinot Noir and Chardonnay.

The partnership between Domaine Serene and Linfield is already underway, with on-site educational programs hosted by the winery and a January study-abroad trip for Linfield students that included a visit the Evenstads' French winery, Château de la Crée in Burgundy.

GAINING GROUND

Vineyard, REX HILL and Raptor Ridge, reads like a "who's who?" of the Chehalem Mountains. The AVA stretches from a low elevation of 200 feet to 1,600 feet near the top of Bald Peak and shares a border with the Chehalem Mountains AVA.

While it's rainier and cooler than its Tualatin Hills neighbors, the proposed Laurelwood AVA shares one significant feature with them. You guessed it: Laurelwood soils. What fascinates me in the Laurelwood AVA proposal, however, is the deep roots discussion.

Vines in this area don't face anything like big rocks or blocks of hardpan to stop them from driving straight down in search of water. The petition zeroes in on this, stating younger vines situated in the shallow loess will produce high pH grapes with powerfully floral aromatics, dusty tannins and red fruit flavors like cranberry, raspberry or cherry.

As the roots age and dig deeper, they touch the basalt zone. At that point, grapes gain in acidity, acquiring darker fruit flavors and what the petition describes as "violet, lavender, anise, white pepper aromatics, darker and present tannins with a brambly, earthy note."

None of these AVAs is official yet, but the Van Duzer Corridor AVA could be approved any day now. The other four are still in the perfected stage, but it's unlikely any will face serious challenges during public comments. Expect the Tualatin Hills AVA to be approved next, followed closely by the others.

In addition to her duties at both wineries, Liz managed to maintain a busy community service calendar as an advocate for abused and neglected children, a board member for Volunteers in Medicine, a board member of Stewards for the Relief Nursery, and an active volunteer and adviser to the Children's Miracle Network. She also continued her family legacy as an active supporter of the University of Oregon and Ducks' athletics.

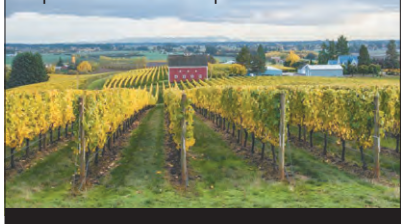

Liz is survived by daughters, Julia Stiltner and Olivia Cowles; son-in-law, Andrew Stiltner; granddaughter, Charlotte; four brothers, Bruce, Bill, Scott, and Clark; and three sisters, Deborah, Marcia and Silva; as well as many nieces and nephews.

so being as pure as we can…the goal is to have elegant classic wines." For his own label, he said, "I use techniques to add complexity to the wine, but they have to be in harmony…to evoke memories." While becoming proficient in a second language, he was mastering two approaches to winemaking.

Regarding the impact Guillén had on his winemaking, Greg Sanders, White Rose Estate owner and founding winemaker, recalls, "He always had a more practical orientation … I would want to do something sort of severe and he would suggest something slightly less severe and we would … move a little bit more sensibly as a result of it. Sanders contrasted their approaches: "Jesús liked to address people's attention to more of the density of the body, he [preferred] a full [wine] and I was more about detail." Sanders acknowledged the support of Guillén and general manager Gavin Joll for adopting whole cluster fermentation as a significant element of the White Rose style during early trials.

Joll reflected on the 12 years he worked with Guillén: "I will always appreciate his talent, intellect and ability as a winemaker, but above all, I will admire how caring, kind and thoughtful he was as a person. He was a truly special person who had a profound and positive impact on those he met." Owing to his familiarity with the procedures and winemaking style, he has taken the lead role in creating the 2018 vintage of White Rose wines.

Anthony King, owner of King Wine Consulting, has been providing significant technical support to complete the 2018 vintage of Guillén Family Wines. Guillén's brother, Dagoberto, and father have also been engaged in creating the wines. In addition, King has been consulting with Joll on the White Rose wines.

Over the past decade, Guillén gained recognition as the first Hispanic head winemaker in the state as well as the producer of consistently high-scoring Pinot Noir. Earlier this year, he was named one of "Top 40 under 40 Tastemakers of 2018" by Wine Enthusiast. He is also a subject of the recently released documentary "Red, White and Black: The Oregon Wine Story," an independent film about the state's minority winemakers.

As his skills and fame grew, so did his confidence. When asked in the Linfield Archive interview if he believed he makes wines of the same quality as the two that changed his career path, Guillén responded, "I think I am performing at that level now." Despite the recognition and his sense of accomplishment, he remained down-to-earth and well loved. To many, even those who knew him briefly, he was a dear friend. To those in the Hispanic wine community, he became a role model and generous mentor.

Along with Sofía Torres McKay, owner and winegrower of Cramoisi Vineyard, and Miguel Lopez, the brand ambassador at Domaine Roy et Fils, Guillén began forming an organization to recognize and assist Hispanic vineyard workers in achieving their goals in the wine industry. The cover story in the August 2018 issue of OWP featured this project. Guillén's passing has dealt an anguished blow to the project as Torres McKay poignantly explains, "There are no words to describe the pain [I feel from] losing our dear friend, Jesús, mi hermano, so humble, sweet and the kindest person I ever met, a big fighter with a huge heart, working toward the recognition of our Hispanic workers in the wine industry, working toward a way to make them feel part of our community, [so] that they are not isolated and [know] that we care about them and that we value and appreciate the work they do for us in the wine industry." Evidencing the resolve to continue, she says the name of our group will be Asociacion Hispana en la Industria Vinicola de Oregon, AHIVOY, as Guillén wanted.

"We will continue to evolve and develop the things that Jesús, Sofia and I wanted to see for the future of our Hispanic workforce," Lopez adds. "We shared the same vision of bridging the worlds that, at times, seemed isolated from one another (vineyard, winery, tasting rooms) and show that we, too, are as passionate about the work we did, even though we weren't owners, managers, winemakers for the most part. The thought of him not being here to see this to fruition breaks my heart for us and the people we wish to see grow…we are part of the tapestry of the Oregon wine industry and Jesús was thread and needle….The best way that I can honor him is to keep running forward, don't stop, keep moving." Torres McKay reports that new members are joining AHIVOY to define and continue the work.

Jesús Guillén is survived by his wife, Yuliana; son, Adrian; mother, Rosario; father, Jesús Sr.; brother, Dagoberto; and sister, Dalia Duran-Guillén. On Nov. 8, members of the Hispanic community, wine industry and friends of the winery joined the family to bid farewell to Guillén at the viewing, Mass and interment in Dayton and McMinnville.

A GoFundMe account has been established for Guillén's wife and son. Visit gofundme.com/jesus-guillen for more information.

Industry response has been reminiscent of the outpouring in 2004 after the sudden death of Jimi Brooks of Brooks Wines, who was also 38 and left a young son. On Nov. 13, Ian Burrows, owner of Consulon, and Andrew Turner of Valley Wine Merchants in Newberg convened a meeting of some 20 restaurateurs, winemakers, retailers and media representatives to begin planning a series of fundraising events featuring Guillén Family Wines. Winter's Hill Estate hosted a wine tasting and sale of Guillén Family Wines on Nov. 24 for the benefit of the family. On Dec. 6, a benefit dinner was held at Ruddick/Wood in Newberg.

During his brief but significant career, Guillén created about a dozen vintages of Guillén Family Wines and 10 of White Rose Estate Pinot Noirs, whose aromas will not only conjure personal memories but, especially for those who knew him, evoke memories of this extraordinary gentleman and winemaker for years to come. Please visit guillenfamily.com if you would like to acquire some beautifully crafted Guillén Family Wines.

Noir that has been more than 50 years in the making.

Editor's Postscript: The TTB has recently required the surrender of eight labels of Copper Cane wines misrepresenting Oregon geographic designations, issued four "use-ups" totaling 79,794.5 cases and the OLCC staff has proposed the revocation of Copper Cane's certificate to ship wine into the state for distribution for "the number of violations committed by Copper Cane, which indicate a disregard for the law." The California producer has requested a hearing contesting the revocation and the legislature has begun hearings on proposed statutes to strengthen Oregon's Truth-in-Labeling laws.

INDUSTRY RESEARCH

and wine quality. "Defining nitrogen, phosphorus, and potassium leaf and petiole tissue standards that apply to Pinot Noir gives the growers a better target to manage nutrition," Schreiner explained. "The standards are out there; we've done the work. It's up to the growers to use them."

Data is one thing, but influencing grower practices is another, so OSU researcher Dr. Patty Skinkis works with growers around the state in their vineyards. For example, there's a common assumption in the wine industry that low crop loads equal high quality fruit, but Skinkis holds seven years of evidence to challenge the assumption.

"[The crop load study] was really putting research into their hands," Skinkis explained. "Not just how to manage yield, but it gave [growers] a better understanding of how they can work with quantitative data in their vineyard, and what they can look for and what they can measure."

Numerous reasons exist for growers and winemakers to participate in OSU and USDA-ARS research projects. Taking part can help shape the research agenda, solve real-life problems, put scientific rigor and real data into the study, and gain relationships that can advise and answer questions. Chien calls field research a way to grow "citizen scientists," a term coined by Ted Casteel of Bethel Heights Vineyard. He continues, "Participation in research gives growers a chance to learn the scientific methods, inferences and deductions; the difference between correlation and causality. It helps them to be more observant and analytical."

Elizabeth Clark, winemaker at Airlie Winery, has participated in Skinkis' crop load trials, and has come to value her relationships with OSU faculty. "I'm very comfortable calling them now. They're a sounding board," Clark said. "There's a level of trust there."

Typically, wine marketing and tourism research has been funded by ODA and Travel Oregon. Yet, in 2017, OWRI added an applied economics arm, signaling the importance this aspect of research has on the wine industry. "We're looking at wine clubs and how to improve the efficacy of [them], tasting room dynamics from a consumer behavior standpoint and how to best use the tasting room point of sale," Chien commented.

Travel Oregon funded seven wine-related projects in 2017 and 2018 through wine country license plate fees, two of which involved research to develop wine tourism demographics. ODA, with funding from the USDA Specialty Crops Block Grant program, has historically focused on wine marketing and promotion, but according to ODA staffer Gabrielle Redhead, the department is more inclined now to fund research and would like to explore studies related to the Specialty Crop Program priorities.

Funded by "a tax on the sale or use of all agricultural products used in a winery for making wine, as well as all vinifera or hybrid grapes or grape products exported out of Oregon," OWB also conducts wine marketing and tourism research in its work to advance the industry. In 2017 and 2018, OWB allocated $350,000 to research supporting seven OSU and USDA-ARS projects. In 2018, OWB conducted a series of grower conversations around the state to help shape their future research priorities.

No matter the domain — basic sciences, applied agriculture or consumer behavior and market economics — research takes dedicated scientists, time, focus and money. OSU viticulturist Dr. Alex Levin calls research a stair-step approach to what is now a robust wine industry.

Levin notes, "There's a feeling sometimes: 'What has research done for me lately?' People tend to remember the big jumps. But research tends to be very incremental, and the advances come year after year, sometimes leading to things that you do or things that you shouldn't do. Both are important."
